The Entertainment.

A crowd that taxed library hall to its capacity applauded the Burlington Dramatic Club through a three hour's entertainment last Saturday night. The parties constituting the cast of characters had worked faithfully preparing the drama, "The Noble Outcast," and the large audience showed its hearty appreciation of their efforts by the generous applause and frequent encores. People came for miles, some of whom were unable to get into the hall and returned home without witnessing the performance. The jam was so great that it was impossible to handle the crowd in a satisfactory manner, although everything possible along that line was done. The characters of the drama were well interpreted which resulted in some high-class acting and the display of considerable dramatic talent. Besides the drama and farce the evening's program was replete with other very interesting features which time and space forbid enumerating. CHAPTER III.

Trouble at Scratch Hill.
Captain Murrell had established himself at Balaam's Cross Roads. He was supposed to be interested in the purchase of a plantation, and in company with Crenshaw visited the numerous tracts of land which the merchant owned; but though he professed delight with the country, he was plainly in no haste to become committed to any one of the several propositions Crenshaw was eager to submit.

"The Baron would have suited me," he told Bladen one day. They had just returned from an excursion into the country and were seated in the lawyer's office.
"You say your father was a friend of the old general's?" said Bladen.
"Years ago, in the north—yes," answered Murrell.

Murrell regarded the lawyer in silence for a moment out of his deeply sunk eyes.

"Too bad about the boy," he said at length slowly.

"How do you mean, Captain?" asked Bladen.

"I mean it's a pity he has no one except Yancy to look after him," said Murrell; but Bladen showed no interest and Murrell went on: "Has Yancy any legal claim on the boy?"

"No, certainly not; the boy was merely left with Yancy because Crenshaw didn't know what else to do with him."

"Get possession of him, and if I don't buy land here I'll take him west with me," said Murrell quietly. "I am willing to spend five hundred dollars on this if necessary."

"I'll have to think your proposition over," said Bladen.

The immediate result of this conversation was that within twenty-four hours a man driving two horses hitched to a light buggy arrived at Scratch Hill in quest of Bob Yancy, whom he found at dinner and to whom he delivered a letter. Mr. Yancy was profoundly impressed by the attention, for holding the letter at arm's length, he said:

"Well, sir, I've lived nigh on to forty years, but I never got a piece of writing before—never, sir. People, if they are close by, spoke to me, if at a distance they bothered, but none of 'em ever wrote."

"What's your answer?" demanded the stranger.

"You tell him I'll be monstrous glad to talk it over with him any time he fancies to come out here."

The next day Yancy had occasion to visit Balaam's Cross Roads. Crenshaw gave him a disquieting opinion as to the probable contents of his letter.

He Had Not Long to Wait, for Presently a Buggy Move in Sight.

ter, for he himself had heard from Bladen that he had decided to assume the care of the boy.

"I reckon Bladen will have the law on his side, Bob."

"The law be damned—I got what's fair on mine. I don't wish to better than that," exclaimed Yancy, over his shoulder. He strode from the store and started down the sandy road at a brisk run. Miserable forebodings of an impending tragedy leaped up within him, and the miles were many that lay between him and the Hill.

As he breasted the slope he came within sight of a little group in his own dooryard. Saving only Uncle Sammy Bellamy, the group revolved itself into the women and children of the Hill, but there was one small figure he missed. The patriarch hurried toward him, leaning on his cane.

"They've took your nerry, Bob!" he cried, in a high, thin voice.

"Who's took him?" asked Yancy hoarsely.

"He was Dave Blount. Get your gun, Bob, and go after him—kill the miserable sneaking cuss!" cried Uncle

Sammy. "By the Fayetteville Road, Bob, not ten minutes ago—you can cut him off at Ox Road forks!"

Yancy breathed a sigh of relief. A rifle was placed in Yancy's hands.

"Thank you all kindly," said Yancy, and tuck away he struck off through the pine woods. A brisk walk of twenty minutes brought him to the Ox Road forks.

He had not long to wait, for presently the buggy move in sight. As the buggy came nearer he recognised his ancient enemy in the person of the man who sat at Hannibal's side, and stepping into the road—seized the horses by their bits. At sight of him Hannibal shrieked his name in delight.

"Uncle Bob—Uncle Bob—" he cried. "Yes, it's Uncle Bob. You can light down, Nerry."

"Leggo them horses!" said Mr. Blount.

"Light down, Nerry," said Yancy, still pleasantly.

Hannibal instantly availed himself of the invitation. At the same moment Blount struck him with his whip, and his horses reared wildly, thinking the blow meant for them.

Seeing that the boy had reached the ground in safety, Yancy relaxed his hold on the team, which instantly plunged forward. Then as the buggy past him he made a grab at Blount and dragged him out over the wheels into the road, where he proceeded to fetch Mr. Blount a smack in the jaw. Then with a final skilful kick he sent Mr. Blount sprawling.

"Don't let me catch you around these diggings again, Dave Blount, or I swear to God I'll be the death of you!"

Hannibal rode home through the pine woods in triumph on his Uncle Bob's mighty shoulders.

CHAPTER IV.

Law at Balaam's Cross Roads.
But Mr. Yancy was only at the beginning of his trouble. Three days later there appeared on the borders of Scratch Hill a gentleman armed with a rifle. It was Charley Balaam, old Squire Balaam's nephew.

"Can I see you friendly, Bob Yancy?" Balaam demanded with the lungs of a stentor, sheltering himself behind the thick bole of a sweetgum, for he observed that Yancy held his rifle in the crook of his arm.

"I reckon so, Charley Balaam, if you are friendly," said Yancy.

"I'm a-going to trust you, Bob," said Balaam. And forsaking the shelter of the sweetgum he shuffled up the slope.

"How are you, Charley?" asked Yancy, as they shook hands.

"Only just tolerable, Bob. You've been warranted—Dave Blount swore hit on to you." He displayed a sheet of paper covered with much writing and decorated with a large seal.

"Read it," he said mildly. Balaam scratched his head.

"I don't know that hit's my duty to do that, Bob. Hit's my duty to serve it on to you."

At this juncture Uncle Sammy's bent form emerged from the path that led off through the woods in the direction of the Bellamy cabin. With the patriarch was a stranger.

"Howdy, Charley. Here, Bob Yancy, you shake hands with Bruce Carrington," commanded Uncle Sammy. At the same time Yancy and Balaam manifested interest. They saw a man in the early twenties, clean-limbed and broad-shouldered, with a handsome face and shapely head. "Yes, sir, hit's a grandson of Tom Carrington that used to own the grist-mill down at the Forks."

"Where you located at, Mr. Carrington?" asked Yancy. But Carrington was not given a chance to reply. Uncle Sammy saved him the trouble.

"Back in Kentucky. He takes rats down the river to New Orleans, then he comes back on ships to Baltimore, or else he hoo's no't over-land. He wants to visit the Forks," he added.

"I'm shortly goin' that way myself, Mr. Carrington, and I'll be pleased of your company—but first I got to get that cuss back on Yancy's side."

"I knowed I knowed he'd try to get even! What's the charge again, you, Bob?"

"Read hit," said Balaam. "Why, sho—can't you read plain writtin', Uncle Sammy?" for the patriarch was showing signs of embarrassment.

"If you gentlemen will let me—" said Carrington pleadingly. After a moment's scrutiny of the paper that Balaam had thrust in his hand, Carrington began:

buggy whip."

Squire Balaam removed his spectacles and leaned back in his chair.

"It's the opinion of this here pot that the whole question of assault rests on whether Bob Yancy saw the order, Bob Yancy swears he didn't see it, while Dave Blount swears he showed it to him. If Bob Yancy didn't know of the existence of the order he was clearly actin' on the idea that Blount was stealin' his nerry, and he done what any one would have done under the circumstances. If, on the other hand, he knew of this order from the co't, he was not only guilty of assault, but he was guilty of resistin' an officer of the co't."

The squire paused impressively. His audience drew a long breath.

"Can a body drag a word here?" said Uncle Sammy's thin voice that cut into the silence.

"Certainly, Uncle Sammy. This here co't will always admire to listen to you."

"Well, I'd like to say that I consider that Fayetteville co't mighty of-ficious with its orders. This part of the county won't take nothin' off Fayetteville! We don't interfere with Fayetteville, and blamed if we'll let Fayetteville interfere with us!"

There was a murmur of approval. Scratch Hill remembered the rifles in its hands and took comfort.

"The Fayetteville co't air a higher co't than this, Uncle Sammy," explained the squire indignantly.

"I'm a-sore of that," snapped the patriarch. "I've seen hit's steeple."

"Air you finished, Uncle Sammy?" asked the squire deferentially.

"I 'low I am. But I 'low that if this here case is goin' again Bob Yancy I'd recommend him to go home and not listen to no mo' foolishness."

"Mr. Yancy will oblige this co't by settin' still while I finish this case," said the squire with dignity.

"Mr. Yancy has sworn to one thing, Mr. Blount to another. Now the Yancys air an old family in these parts; Mr. Blount's folks air strangers. Consequently," pursued the squire, somewhat vindictively, "we ain't had any time in which to form an opinion of the Blounts; but for myself, I'm suspicious of folks that keep movin' about and who don't seem able to get located permanent nowhere, who air here today and away tomorrow. But you can say that of the Yancys. They air an old family in the country, and naturally this co't feels obliged to accept a Yancy's word before the word of a stranger. And, in view of the fact that the defendant did not seek litigation, but was perfectly satisfied to let matters rest where they was, it is right and just that all costs should fall on the plaintiff."

Greensboro, N. C.—"For a long time I was so run down and debilitated that I could hardly drag around. My appetite was poor and I could not sleep nights. I had tried different so-called tonics without benefit. I was advised to try your cod liver and iron tonic. Vinol, and I am so glad I did, for it gave me a hearty appetite, I soon commenced to sleep soundly, and I feel stronger, well and more active than I have for years. Every run-down or debilitated person should just give Vinol a trial." K. Allsbrook.

POLITICAL FARCE-COMEDY.

There was a farce-comedy enacted in Washington last week to be put on the stage and a fee charged to see it. Henry Prewitt, chairman of Democratic State Central Committee who has fought the County Unit bill for many years; Charles M. Lewis, representative of the whisky interests before the Ohio, Tennessee and other legislatures; Samuel J. Shackleford, legislative agent of the American Tobacco Co., and the Standard Oil Co. of Cleveland, and Mayor Head of Louisville former candidate for governor met at the nation's capital for the purpose of deciding how the Kentucky delegation at Baltimore would vote for President.

With the aid of several congressmen, some of whom may not be re-nominated, they called a state convention for some time in June, and instructed the delegation to give a unanimous vote for Champ Clark for President. Then the whole absurd program was telegraphed to the Courier-Journal and spread on the first page so that Kentucky Democrats would be prepared to get into line and obey orders, with Henry Watterson cracking the whip.

Singular to relate every man present at the Washington conference was opposed to the nomination of Gov. McCreary and fought him bitterly. None of them had anything to do with the organization, which headed by Beckham, Mayo, Camden, Van Sant, Haly and a united county press carried the state by over 90% majority, when the bullets were flying thickest these lobbyists and allies of the special interests who are now trying to seize the party organization, were "humping in the rear" with Watterson, or hiding under a sutler's wagon.

The truth is that the old crowd, which was thoroughly whipped by Gov. McCreary and his friends in the primary, are trying to make an alliance with the whisky interests in the hope of controlling the next legislature and repealing the County Unit law. They do not care anything about Champ Clark. They are just as willing to fight under one flag as another. The combination of congressmen, who have been favored by Clark as speaker, appeals to them as the best chance to again dominate the state organization.

The Democrats of Kentucky will not be deterred by a cabal of selfish politicians, who have lost their influence at home, flock to Washington to exaggerate their importance and deceive the credulous. So far as shown Gov. Woodrow Wilson has a large following in this state. Oscar Underwood, a native son of distinguished Kentucky parentage, has many admirers. Ollie James himself is highly regarded as presidential timber. How ridiculous it is then for a lot of small fry politicians to pledge support to Champ Clark or anybody else. Kentucky will be a potent factor at Baltimore. With a big four composed of McCreary, James, Beckham and Mayo, and district delegates of ability and character its services will be sought and its leadership followed. The state administration headed by Gov. McCreary, has redeemed the state and honored the Democracy. They should not be cast aside to suit the whims of selfish interests. Men who have done much in the past to destroy the party—Elizabethtown News.

She's a wise woman who knows just what to do when her husband's life is in danger, but Mrs. R. J. Flint, Braintree, Vt., is of that kind. "She insisted on my using Dr. King's New Discovery," writes Mr. Flint. "For dreadful cough, when I was so weak my friends all thought I had only a short time to live, and it completely cured me." A quick cure for coughs and colds, it's the most safe and reliable medicine for many throat and lung troubles—grip, quinsy, tonsillitis, hemorrhages. A trial will convince you. 50c. and $1.00. Guaranteed by all dealers.

Country people are in more danger from lightning than are the people of the cities, according to J. Warren Smith, Professor of Meteorology in the United States Bureau, who states that lightning kills two and a half times more farmers than the railroads do. He points out that in Ohio, there are on an average 45 thunderstorms annually and statistics show a greater number of deaths in this section of the country than in others. The property loss from this cause is enormous. The greatest danger during thunder storms is under trees, in strong drafts, of air, near wire fences, wire clothes lines, wires attached to poles, etc. Barns are struck often by the churches. Buildings with wooden roofs, when struck, are more likely to be burned than those with metal roofs. Good lightning rods, properly put up, are an efficient protection, but poor rods are worse than none. Professor Smith states that iron rods kept painted are better than copper and are much cheaper.

Clarksburg, Ky., W. J. Bellamy gives particulars of his son's recovery. He says: "My boy of sixteen had bronchial trouble, ever since he was a baby, and it gradually grew worse until we feared consumption. I got a bottle of Foley's Honey and Tar Compound and soon there was such a marked improvement that I got a second bottle and this will, I think, make a permanent cure. The first bottle cured his stubborn cough, and I think this wonderful medicine saved my boy's life." For sale at Jones Drug Store, Walton, Ky.

"What made you so late?"
"I met Smithson."

"Did you tell him to take Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy?"
"Sure, that is what he needs."

How about the poor man's fruit crop—the blackberry?

Stock is beginning to get a pretty good supply of grass.

Earl Smith was delivering 330 a ton hay to Burlington purchasers, last week.

The whitewash brush will begin to get in its work in the next few days.

It is said that the wheat crop in this county this year will be almost a failure.

The campaign for special premiums for the next fair at Florence is now on.

Lawn swings are being brought from their winter quarters and put in position for summer use.

It will be seen by the notice elsewhere in the Recorder that Raymond Byland is applying for a parole.

The Florence pike is in pretty good condition but needs a generous supply of new metal, which it will, doubtless, receive this summer.

Prof. Dix went to Union, last Friday, where he addressed the High School taught by his brother, Homer, that being the last day of the term.

The very slow progress farmers are making towards the 1912 crop of corn is calculated to make that cereal go several cents higher on the bushel yet.

At this office is a pair of heavy cloth overshoes some man left on the porch at the jail during circuit court. The owner will please call and get them.

There was quite a reversal in the form of the weather last Monday, a cold wave arriving about noon making the heavy coats and fires quite comfortable.

Mr. G. S. Walrath traded his fine harness mare to a party in Cincinnati for a pair of nice three year old mules which he will use in his business in Bellevue.

Several pupils of the Boone County High School will leave for Walton, this afternoon where they will participate in the educational Tournament which closes on Saturday.

Don't be surprised if you have an attack of rheumatism this spring. Just rub the affected part freely with Chamberlain's Liniment and it will soon disappear. Sold by J. W. Berkshire and E. E. Kelly.

Doubtless there will be some corn planted in this county during this month. In fact the Recorder will wager that B. H. Berkshire, of Petersburg, will be one who takes a turn at that branch of work.

NOTICE—Notice is hereby given that I will make an application to the Board of Prison Commissioners of the State of Kentucky, at Frankfort, for parole, at its regular meeting on May 7th, 1912. Raymond Byland.

Fly time is near at hand, consequently you want to invest in a "fanglefoot" and a supply of "window screens" should be repaired and put in place. A fly is very annoying about the time you are taking the farewell morning nap.

James Pettit's residence at Limaburg is nearing completion. It is a two story frame and is located immediately in front of the old residence he now occupies, which, by the way, is a very ancient land mark, probably the oldest residence in that neighborhood.

Mr. Keys, butter maker for Clover Leaf Creamery, has learned that some times a nice, heavy roast of beef will not keep in a first-class refrigerator. One disappeared from his refrigerator last Friday night, some hungry prowler having ascertained its whereabouts.

You will look a good while before you find a better medicine for coughs and colds than Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It not only gives relief—it cures. Try it when you have a cough or cold and you are certain to be pleased with the prompt cure which it will effect. For sale by J. W. Berkshire and E. E. Kelly.

Farmers who had made their plans for a big week's work, beginning last Monday morning, were very much chagrined when their slumbers were disturbed Sunday night by the falling of a copious rain. Rain in such a quantity as that of last Sunday night is not desirable at this time of year when not one-half of one per cent of the corn land is broken.

W. S. Bailey, McCreary, Ky. is willing to verify his statement as given herewith. He says "my wife had a severe attack of lagrippe that terminated in bronchitis. She coughed as though she had consumption, could not sleep, and her medicine gave no relief. She was advised to try Foley's Honey and Tar Compound and she continued using it until she had taken three bottles, which effected a permanent cure." For sale at Jones' Drug Store, Walton, Ky.

Clear weather and warm sunshine make happy farmers and fine lambs.

Don't forget to call on Thomas Rice if you want any of Jones' make of fertilizers. He has all the brands.

Dr. E. W. Duncan is having his father's residence remodeled considerably—putting in new doors and windows.

Considerable corn land has been broken too wet this spring, the effects of which will be seen all the season.

The condition of the East Bend road has made a considerable change for the better during the past week.

Lawrenceburgers have been smacking their lips for a week over a 25 cent a quart southern strawberries.

Fishing parties are now seen often along Gunpowder and Woolper creeks, in which there are supposed to be many fine fish.

The fragrance of the fruit blossoms again greet you, and admonishes you that real warm weather is not very far in the future.

The friends of Mr. Alfred Cason, one of the oldest citizens in this part of the county, will be glad to learn that he came thru the very severe weather in good shape.

Asa Cason put a good horse on the market in Cincinnati, one day last week. On account of the lack of work the animal had exhibited some traits that were not to Mr. Cason's liking and it had to go.

Jesse and Calvert Kirkpatrick opened the carpenter season at Mrs. Mat Graves' near Bullittsville, Monday. They will spend several weeks in Petersburg remodeling a building for Ben Crisler to occupy as a hotel.

The Lawrenceburg Press says officeholders are one-twelfth of the voting population of Indiana. No wonder that when they are pretty generally of the same party they can dictate the nominations when assisted by their friends.

A contributor to the Lawrenceburg Press says: "There have never been any 'reverends' in the ministry of the Christian church, and in at least two of the denominations the appellation was long ago discarded."

A large steam roller was put to work on the Lexington pike last week for the purpose of smoothing out some of the very rough places resulting from the heavy travel during the road's very swampy condition recently. It did fine work where new metal had been spread.

Burlington is putting on its usual garb of green. The shade trees are sending forth a heavy foliage, while the blue grass along the sides of the streets is presenting a handsome appearance, and the old town will be inviting if the streets are kept free of rubbish and weeds this summer, which, to do, will not require much labor.

The body of a man was found floating in the river near the Kentucky shore opposite this city Tuesday about noon by Frank Hayes and Peter Hartman. It was nude with the exception of a pair of shoes and showed evidence of foul play, the throat having been cut. The remains, which were in a badly decomposed state were buried. There is no clue as to who the man was. —Lawrenceburg Press.

The indications are that Sandford and Conner are going to make good with the Mayville ball team in the Blue Grass League—Sandford as a pitcher and Conner at short. Conner's stick work in the exhibition games played with the Battle Creek Miners was very good. Two out of the series of three, consequently there is nothing too good for him in Mayville at this time. Of the last game the Independent says:

"In Mayville's half of the tenth McCan got on first on an error, Snyder also got on on a boot, Clever grounded, taking first, but forcing McCan out at third. Conner then came up with a smile on his face and knocked the sphere to the left field fence scoring the two men on bases and winning the game."

An auto party was started one afternoon last week out on the Florence pike by a performance that had all the ear-marks of an attempted hold-up, but the party at the wheel threw open the throttle and was out at the danger zone before the intentions of the man behind the gun developed into anything serious. The threatening looking combination was composed of a long man, and a long old fashioned muzzle loading shot gun, the barrel of which glinted in the sunshine like the section of Greenland icebergs, and looked capable of demolishing a modern battle ship in a few rounds, but the smile that spread over the man's face and the shake of his head when the machine party saluted him at a distance indicated that his heart was as void of any evil designs as the gun was empty of powder and balls. Bert has been threatening what he intended to do, but he has gone his limit and is ready to take a ride.

Base Ball.

The Bellevue and Burlington High School base ball clubs played a fourteen inning game at the Burlington park last Saturday afternoon in the presence of a small crowd of enthusiastic fans. The Bellevue team started the game in a whirlwind manner that was decidedly disheartening to the home boys, the score standing ten to nothing at the close of the fourth inning up to which time Rogers held Burlington to three scattering hits while Bellevue had made eight off of Dix. In the 7th inning Burlington found Rogers for eight hits, the inning netting 7 runs. In the eighth inning the score was tied up, and nothing more was doing until the 11th inning when each team scored three runs and the score was not changed until the 14th, inning when Bellevue put two runs across which Burlington could not overcome, one run being the best that could be done, the final score being 16 to 15 in favor of the visitors. Rogers' place in the box was taken by Robert Brady in the third inning while Dempsey succeeded Dix at the beginning of the 11th inning. Brady's work on the mound is very much after the style of his father and he got out of several very tight places. Clore at third saved the game in the twelfth inning by a sensational catch of a line fly for which he had to go up into the air a long ways. It was the first game Dix ever pitched and he surprised all by his work, while Hager's catching was a revelation. Dempsey pitched good ball but the Bellevue boys had their batting eyes with them and he could put nothing on the sphere that would keep them from finding it. It was a slugger's work, was ably witnessed highly by all who witnessed it. Last Saturday's was the second defeat for the Burlington team yet, the Union team beating it 8 to 5 the Saturday before.

Following is the line-up of Bellevue base ball team which is now ready to begin a series with any team in the county:
Edward Rogers Pitcher,
Ottie Decker Catcher,
Less Ryle First Base,
Kenneth Berkshire Second Base,
Willard Clore Third Base,
Robt. Hensley Right Field,
Harve Smith Center Field,
Willie Lacy Left Field,
Robt. Brady Short Stop,
Kenneth Berkshire, Manager,
Harve Smith, Captain.

A buggy in which several little girls were riding about town, last Sunday afternoon, was turned over at the sharp curve in the pike near the residence of Mrs. Barlow. Fortunately all the occupants escaped without injury. The vehicle was not injured as the horses did not run. The little folks were pretty badly frightened.

An item of home interest. Charles Gornoy, 397 Maxwell St., Lexington, Ky. has lately been cured of kidney and bladder trouble. He says: "I heard of Foley's Kidney Pills, and the good they were doing, and after taking them a few days the pain left my back, the tired feeling passed away, and I am glad to recommend them." For sale at Jones' Drug Store, Walton, Ky.

The failure of the Second National Bank, Cincinnati, hit the stockholder pretty hard, quite a number of whom are Kentuckians. The bank's failure was the result of its officers trying to secure for it all the business in its territory regardless of how it was brought about, and an utter disregard of business principles. When a man or firm is willing to work for you for nothing and give you something for that privilege he is not proceeding on a substantial basis.

PERTINENT QUESTION

Asked By Senator W. A. Byron, In A Communication to the Augusta Chronicle.

Should Be Forced to Tell.

There are a few things the 1993 Burley growers want to know, and they want to know it NOW. First, they want to know how much tobacco has been turned over to the Burley Tobacco Society, second, they want to know how much of this tobacco has been sold; third, they want to know how much money it brought and what expenses are charged up against their tobacco; fifth, they want to know how much money, belonging to them, is now in the possession of the Burley Tobacco Society, and in the banks throughout State and sixth they want to know when they are going to get it all.

Are the above requests unreasonable? A man came to my office one day last week with his certificate and said that in the other two distributions he had been paid $40, and want to know if he could not get some more, as he had no flour at home for his feed. He said he had no feed for his team to enable him to do his "spring breaking." I told him that we now had $100,000 in the bank of Bracken county belonging to the farmers, and probably about that much more in the banks of Lexington, but I was not advised as to when he would get his, as the Executive Committee at Lexington, were the only people who knew when the "distribution" would be made, and so far they have not seen fit to tell anyone when they are going to make it. Another man said to me that he was paying 8 per cent on borrowed money for the last two years, and that he was waiting to get his money out of the pool to pay it off, and he wanted to know when there would be "something doing." I again referred him to the Executive Committee, but he only looked discouraged and went away.

Still another man asked me whether or not the money which the Society owed him was drawing any interest, and if it was, would he get it. I referred him to the Executive Committee at Lexington as being the only place he would be likely to get the information he sought and when I referred him to the committee he asked me who the committee were, and where they lived. I passed him up as a hopeless case, pathetic in his lamb like innocence and honesty.

The farmers were bull-dozed and robbed by the American Tobacco company, and they stood it for nearly a century of a century, but when they did raise a howl it was heard all round the world; and if they money, which is tied up in the Burley Tobacco Society, continues a little while longer, to move like "molasses in January," they will raise another howl which in comparison to the one they raised heretofore, will be like that of the roaring lion to the mewling kitten. Tell them where their money is, and give it to them. It belongs to them and no man or set of men have any right to withhold it from them.

A Log On The Track. Of the fast express means serious trouble arises if it is moved, so does loss of appetite. It means lack of vitality, loss of strength and nerve weakness. If appetite fails, take Electric Bitters quickly to overcome the cause by toning up the stomach and curing the indigestion. Michael Hesseheimer of Lincoln, Neb., had been sick over three years, but six bottles of Electric Bitters put him right on his feet again. They gave pure blood strong nerves, good digestion. Only 50 cents at all dealers.

The English Sparrow, so long regarded as one of the greatest pests to agriculture in America, has been found to be a friend to the farmers of the West. Not so long ago the discovery was made that the alfalfa crop was being threatened with destruction by a weevil, similar to that which is making such inroads into the cotton crop of the South. All sorts of methods were tried in an effort to destroy the alfalfa weevil, but without much success. Finally the English sparrow was introduced and he did the work, and the Department of Agriculture is hopeful that the results secured last year may be repeated this and following years. No doubt many communities will be glad to learn that the sparrow is good for something and will make an effort to round up all of the feathered tribe and ship them west.

DE LAVAL CREAM SEPARATORS

The World's Standard

Used Exclusively by 98% of World's Creameries

Ten years ago there were a dozen different makes of creamery or factory separators in use. To-day over 98 per cent of the world's creameries use De Laval separators exclusively.

When it comes to buying a separator why not profit by the experience of the creameryman, which qualifies him to advise you correctly.

He knows which separator will give you the best service and be the most economical for you to buy. That's why 98 per cent of the world's creameries use the De Laval exclusively.

There can be no better recommendation for the De Laval than the fact that the men who make the separation of milk a business use the De Laval to the practical exclusion of all other makes. They know from experience.

Kentucky and Kentucky's Son.

When Kentucky declares her choice for the nomination for the Presidency by the Democratic party it will be found that she is true to blood and to bone of her own race, her own people, her own son, Speaker Champ Clark.

Missouri, Illinois and Kentucky naming their delegates in support of the Speaker will command a wonderful influence in the convention, speaking as they do for the very heart of the republic.

If Missouri has given the brilliant son of Kentucky place in the foremost line of public men of the nation, it must not be forgotten that it was Illinois that lifted that other Kentuckian Abraham Lincoln to the highest position in the republic.

Kentucky has bred true to the parent stock and if Virginia deserves the title of mother of Presidents, Kentucky has proven her legitimate descent by furnishing to this country numbers of men qualified in every way for the Presidency.

That same natural ability, that combination of sincerity, energy, sympathy with the masses of the people and thorough understanding of their wishes and needs which gave Lincoln pre-eminence among the public men of the day distinguishes this other Kentuckian who presides over the National House of Representatives.

Among the progressives of Ohio the Speaker has numerous supporters, and that the delegates from this State will be divided between himself and Governor Wilson when the ballots are counted at Baltimore can scarcely be doubted, for the gentlemen named is regarded as in accord with the views of Ohio Democrats upon public questions. In making up the estimates of the votes of the States for the various candidates it will be entirely logical to place the delegates from Kentucky in the column for Speaker Clark, as indications of the trend of Democratic opinion give full warrant for this classification.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

What It Costs to Keep a Horse.

This is a question that is not as a general rule, given much thought by the average farmer. At least not often an account in dollars and cents is kept. When feed is so handy as it is on most farms, there is a tendency to feed all the horses care to eat and not consider the expense. If an account was kept some surprising facts could be found out, and this statement holds true with every line of the farmer's daily work. To conserve and be most economical a careful expense account should be kept by every farmer.

An enterprising farmer of Boone county upon keeping a feed and expense account of his horses for a year found that each team required four tons of hay at the market price of $22 per ton amounted to $88; 131 bushels of corn, at market price of 66c per bushel, made $86; and that the work required to care for the horses was worth $1.40 per week which amounted during the year to $76. The total of these figures is $264, or, in other words, the cost of keeping a horse on his farm for a year was $124. The feed now, of course, is extremely high. In some localities, however, it is valued at more than the prices stated in the above report, but for the year round these prices are a little above the average.

An Ideal Place to Grow Hogs.

The ideal conditions for raising hogs is on a dairy farm that makes butter or high cream. The skim milk then goes to the pigs, and with corn and pasture, no better feed can be desired. Skim milk mixed with wheat shorts is the best pig feed and nothing yet found will add pounds to their bodies more satisfactorily—we mean growing pigs, not fattening hogs. Pigs need the protein, milk sugar and phosphates found in this mash to make them grow. Later on when the corn diet is desired for fattening, then corn should form the chief article of diet. It is often suggested that if hogs are fed protein, they will not eat corn. Too much corn will seed meal will quickly throw them off their feed, causing vomiting. Care should be exercised in using it, the same as in feeding digestive tankage.

Fortunes in Faces.

There's often much truth in the saying "her face is her fortune," but it's never where pimples, skin eruptions, blemishes, or other blemishes disfigure it. Impure blood is back of them all, and shows the need of Dr. King's New Life Pills. Promote health and beauty. Try them. 25 cents at all dealers. X

The next immense ocean passenger ship that is built will be constructed more with a view to safety than to speed, and luxurious apartments for passengers. Her life boat capacity will be equal to her passenger capacity and she will be compelled to keep a safe distance from the home of the iceberg in her trips across the ocean. The fate of the Titanic is a fearful lesson in navigation, and was the result of an ambition on the part of her captain to take a few hours off of the present time record from London to New York.

Don DeGozee

The Belgian Draft Horse, foaled in 1908, will make the present season at E. Aylor's stable one and one-half years from Hebron, Boone County, Ky., at $10.00 to insure a colt to stand up and suck, money due when colt comes or the mare is parted with or leaves the county.

Don DeGozee, despite his great size and weight is well balanced throughout, perfectly proportioned and symmetrically built. He has a light action as a stallion of much smaller type, and his disposition is much better than is usually found in horses of blood strains. He is a beautiful dark sorrel, 17 hands high, weighs 1,700 pounds, has a broad, flat foot, heavy bone, fine style and action. This great breed of draft horses is especially known for better action than any other draft horse for heavy, good bone and good hocks, and gentle, kind workers.

Don DeGozee's dam Della Wire, brown mare, the great draft show mare of Campbell County, Kentucky, sired by Bayard DeGozee No. 2188, whose Belgian Stud Book number is 21670, bred by Mr. Baillieux E. of Gozee, sired by Morton (312), he by Brilliant (709), out of Coats (708), dam Catherine DeGozee (21088), sired by Lion (760), out of Marie (2421).

Great care will be taken to prevent accidents but we will not be responsible should any occur.

LANKY BOB is three years old, 15-3 hands high and a splendid individual.

In handling the above stock care will be taken to prevent accidents, but I will not be responsible should any occur.

Parties breeding to either of these animals must follow up the season. No business done on Sunday. Write for pedigree and particulars. R. D. No. 1, Burlington, Ky.

The High Class Saddle and Harness Stallion,

BELL'S FITZSIMMONS,

2844 A. S. B. A.

Will make the season of 1912 at the W. L. Norman Stock Farm at Walton, Ky., and if you want a show horse bred to him.

BELL FITZSIMMONS is a dark bay, 18 hands, weighs 1200 pounds, with three white feet, snip and star, and lots of style and action. He was sired by BRACKEN CHIEF 2148, by Harrison Chief 1006 by Clark Chief (89); dam Kit Hardy (2830) by Indian Chief (1718); let dam Miss Berry 4034, by Roderick 104; by Mambrino Le Grande (99); 2d dam, by Wells's Yellow Jacket 112; 3d dam by Gray Eagle.

Miss Berry is also the dam of Woodland Chief, one of the finest show horses in Kentucky. Woodland Chief is a full brother to Bell's Fitzsimmons and a full brother to Rhoderick, and one of the finest geldings ever showed, and sold to a party in Texas for $1,000.

Bell's Fitzsimmons is also the sire of the champion walk-trot gelding, Mat Coyne, showed at the Horse Shows in the fall of 1909 and sold for $8,000, and also the champion harness horse he has handled have been by Bell's Fitzsimmons.

The greatest show, harness and saddle horses of our state have sprung from the loins of Harrison Chief and Indian Chief. Where can you find a horse of better breeding than Bell's Fitzsimmons? He has been a winning show horse ever since a suckling colt, and has proven himself a successful sire. Some of the highest priced saddle, harness and walk-trot horses that have left the State have been sired by him.

Personal care over all stock. Mares left on good pasture at 10c a day at owner's expense.

The Fine High Bred Percheron Stallion,

PRINCE OLSEN

Will make the season of 1912 at my farm two miles west of Walton, Boone County, Ky., at $10.00 to insure a living colt. Persons parting with mares forfeit the insurance money. A lien retained on colt until season money is paid.

PRINCE OLSEN was foaled in 1907, and is one model of his class. He weighs 1520 pounds and is nearly 17 hands in height. He is a beautiful black, and is a picture of symmetry and fine point of the horse. His breeding qualities are excellent.

PRINCE OLSEN was sired by Blackmon, a registered Percheron stallion owned by Ole G. Olsen, of Shabbona Grove, Illinois, where he was foaled in 1907, and from whom he was purchased by me last spring, selecting this horse over many others because of his excellent qualities. Prince Olsen is eligible to registry, and is one of the highest bred draft horses ever in this section of the country. The dam of Prince Olsen was a high bred registered Percheron mare. I feel that farmers and breeders will make no mistake in breeding to Prince Olsen as it means a good, strong colt that will meet every requirement on the farm. One of the lacking features of our horses is the size and strength. With the well bred Percheron like Prince Olsen these essentials are fully incorporated.

Come and see the horse and inspect his good points and you will breed to him.

Also at the same place and under the same conditions I will offer for public service my fine breeding jack.

BEN

is a black Jack with neatly points, six years old, 15.3 hands high, large bone and big body, very long ears and has proven himself to be one of the best breeders in Kentucky. His mules are quick sellers and several have been sold at $25 a head of breeding time. His service fee will be $10.

Care will be taken to prevent accidents but I will not be responsible should any occur.

JOSEPH READNOR, Walton, Ky.

Harrison Prince

3340.

His sire is Dandy Jim, 3d, 1531, the well known show horse by McChieff, 1451, by Rex McDonald, 833, by Rex Denmark, 840, he by Origer's Denmark by Old Denmark Chief.

His dam, Mary Neal, 1605, also a show mare, by Boyd Wilks, by Favourite, 1400, 2d dam, Skiddoo, by Washington Denmark, Jr., by Washington Denmark 64.

HIGH VINE,

No. 2733.

Foaled in Spring of 1904

By Highland Gaines 1677.

Grand sire, Highland Denmark, 730 Dam, Bessie Sable, 2838, by Shropshire Kentucky Squirrel, 1865; 2d dam, Ida May by Fayette Denmark, 60; 3d dam, Maxey by Granger; 4th dam, Mare by Expert, 71.

High Vine is a five gaited Saddle Stallion, eight years old, 16 hands high, and weighs 1200 lbs., is a rich golden chestnut in color, and a perfect model in conformation.

High Vine is a uniform breeder and reproduces his own kind. The show record of his colts is unequalled by the colts of any sire in this section of country. In several instances the owners of High Vine colts have been offered $200 for the colts at weaning time, and this handsome price has been paid by the owners as all of them believed the colts to promise much better as they developed. There must be something in the breeding when $200 offers for weanling colts are rejected by owners who are governed by business principles in the sale of the products of their farm. Take a look at any of High Vine's colts and you will see the style and attractive qualities that make the price in a sale.

High Vine will make the season at the property of W. Lee Gaines on the Lexington pike, midway between Walton and Richwood, Boone county, Ky., at $20.00 to insure a live foal season. Free season for 1913 will be given the owner of the best High Vine colt exhibited at the Florence fair at the High Vine colt show.

When one recalls that out of thirty-six towns in California where women voted Monday, twenty-one of them went "wet," it is driven to the irresistible conclusion that man, the biggest devil of the entire brute creation, is not yet ready to relinquish his strangle hold on the fastive highball.—Lexington Herald.

In the southeastern part of Clark county are the remains of the last Indian town in Kentucky and the oldest historical town site in the State. Locally it is known as the Goff mound and circle and the place of its location is Indian Old Fields. While fishing at the Blind Bridge on Salt River Saturday night, John Henry Young, colored, caught an eel that measured three feet in length. When John Henry drew in his catch he thought he had hooked a snake and consequently acted very circumspectly until he became disillusioned. He then pocketed his eel-ship in a coffee sack and carried it home. This is said to be the first eel caught in Salt River in several years, though the stream at one time abounded with them.—Harrodsburg Leader.

Farmer Hubert White, from out of the East Bend road, was a caller at this office a few days since. He was not at all encouraged by the progress his spring work was making, and said his corn ground had not been in proper condition to break this spring. By the way, the farmer is a lover of the national flag, and he takes a hand every year, and thinks he is good for at least another season at the bat and in right field.

Some of the old Confederate soldiers in the county are beginning to get their applications for the pension under the law enacted by the last General Assembly. Several have been in communication with County Judge Casco, to ascertain the preliminary steps necessary to be taken. It must be remembered that the pension law prohibits the county judge filling out the application for the pension unless the matter of their qualifications are to be passed upon by him sitting as a court. There appears to be a great deal of the preliminary steps through in order to secure the pension and there is no time to lose if an applicant gets in on the first payment day will be due August 6th, 1912.

Saves County $4,200.

County Attorney N. E. Riddell, Assessor T. G. Willis, and W. P. Cropper, member of the county board of equalization, went to Frankfort last Monday night to appear before the State board of equalization on Tuesday to try and convince that body that the 10 per cent. increase in Boone county tax values as returned by the assessor on land and town lots would be an injustice to the county. They returned Tuesday evening quite elated over their success, the board agreeing to let Boone's assessment stand as returned by the assessor, Willis, which saves to the county the sum of $4,200 which the taxpayers would have had to put up if the 10 per cent. proposed raise on real estate had remained.

Train Wrecked.

Crittenden, April 29.—The entire train of the Atlantic Special on the Queen and Crescent rail-road was overturned a half mile south of here today while running at a high rate of speed. Two passengers were seriously injured and four other received minor injuries. The accident was due to spreading rails. The three coaches of the train were thrown to one side of the track when the engine suddenly left the rails. The twenty passengers were hurled against the side of the coaches with great force and nearly all were cut with flying glass. The track was torn up for 300 feet and the side of the car was stove in. A fairly good sized audience attended the entertainment at Library Hall last Saturday night. Royce who returned part of themselves with a great deal of credit, the performance being a considerable improvement of that of the Saturday night before, which attracted a very large audience. It took a great deal of hard work to put the plays on properly but those composing the company know no such word as fail.

We would not be without Foley's Kidney Pills in any house for many times their weight in other medicines without relief."

Travels 300 Miles to Get Back to His Old Home.

(Monroe City Democrat.)
About March 1st of last year Reeklewait moved from Lilly, Ill., which is near Chicago, to the neighborhood of Mazon, five miles east of this city.
Mr. Reeklewait shipped all his goods in a freight car and among his belongings were two dogs, a shepherd and a collie. A few days after his arrival one of the dogs, the shepherd, left his new home in about a week arrived at his old home in Illinois.
Something like a week after the departure of the first dog the collie became home sick and cleared out but for some cause after wandering about for several days came back apparently satisfied to remain.
Later, the dog back in Illinois, possibly on account of his recent experiences in traveling, took to the road again and hasn't been seen since. It is supposed the dog has attained the roving habit and concluding that Missouri was so much better place than Illinois decided to return and Mr. Reeklewait looks for him to arrive most any day.
The strange feature of the case is how this dog ever found his way back to his old home. The distance is nearly three hundred miles and in shipping to Missouri the dogs were tied in the end of a box car and it was impossible for them to enjoy the scenery along the route. Owing to their position in the car the dogs could certainly not distinguish directions or know but little of the country over which they traveled; and it would be interesting to know by what manner of instinct or knowledge the dog was guided to his old home.
Many stories were related by the early settlers of Missouri of the wonderful feats performed by dogs which went back to Kentucky and other distant points, but in those cases the dogs were moved overland which would make it easier to retrace their steps. The sagacity of the dog is well known and it is a fact that he becomes homesick the same as a human being, but what is the mysterious instinct that guides him back to his native hearth?

Lice Communicate Typhus Fever

There has recently been a renewed interest in that old fashioned disease, typhus fever, which has become so rare and apparently was so thoroughly under control as to be quite negligible in this country. It has been found that typhus fever may be given to monkeys by the bites of body lice which have previously bitten human patients suffering with the disease or monkeys which have been infected with it in the laboratory. The U.S. Public Health and Marine Hospital Service declares that "it seems likely that the body louse is probably the usual distributing agent by which the disease is carried from individual to individual. Observation seems to show almost beyond doubt that typhus fever is not spread by direct contact with the patient suffering from the disease unless the contact is of such a kind that the exchange of body lice becomes possible." In the light of this modern demonstration some well-known traditions with regard to the intense contagiousness of typhus gain additional interest. In older times typhus was called jail-fever, or ship fever, evidently because of the opportunities for the spread of the disease afforded by the intimate living conditions maintained by the small crowded ships and jails of the old time. A number of stories are told of judges, lawyers, jurymen and spectators being stricken with the disease within a day or two after prisoners suffering from typhus were brought into court. The Journal of the American Medical Association says that we can only conclude from our present knowledge that in the crowded stuffy rooms it was not impossible that body or clothing lice found opportunities to pass from prisoners to more promising food material.

Flagged Train With Shirt.

Tearing his shirt from his back an Ohio man flagged a train and saved it from a wreck, but H. T. Alston, Raleigh, N. C., once prevented a wreck with Electric Bitters. "I was in a terrible plight when I began to use them," he writes, "my stomach head, back and kidneys were all badly affected and my liver was in bad condition, but four bottles of Electric Bitters made me feel like a new man." A trial will convince you of their matchless merit for any stomach, liver or kidney trouble. Price 25 cents at all drug stores.

The new fish law passed by the last legislature inflicts a heavy penalty for the use of net gear in any Kentucky waters. It also makes it a felony, punishable by a term in the penitentiary for any one to use dynamite in any stream or pond in Kentucky. Dynamiters will be severely punished hereafter. Look well to your banks and bends of the stream, and set watches around the ponds, before dynamiting.

Loss of appetite is a sure sign of indigestion. A few doses of Dr. Williams' Stomach and Liver Regulator will strengthen your digestive organs and improve your appetite. It has been found that taking these tablets, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, will strengthen your system and improve your health.

Perhaps some of the readers of the Recorder will recall the endless chain furore that ran through the country a few years ago, at that time the scheme was used largely by people who wished to get rich quickly and easily, and one woman in the East amassed a fortune before the postal authorities put a stop to her apparently harmless plan. It has been some years since even the suggestion of it has been heard, but the people of Florence, as well as the residents of other towns in our county, have been assailed by the plan in a somewhat different form. This year it is the endless chain prayer, and like its forerunners, it is anonymous. The prayer is such as may be heard in any church or home service, but ends with a request amounting to a demand in some cases for the recipient to rewrite this prayer and send one each day for nine days, on the ninth day the writer is promised that he will experience some great joy. He who will not rewrite it will have some great misfortune. I am in receipt of several prayer chain letters, with a request to rewrite them, or I would get the kismet. I am some what in doubt whether they were sent me in some innocence or as a joke, yet my sense of duty forces me to break the chain so weak and brittle lest some one suffer mistakenly clinging to it. People in all walks of life have received these anonymous communications. Some have complied with the demand. To write nine of them takes time, including the cost of postage, and to those of us who are not deeply set in superstition, it would seem that our time might be better spent both for the writer, the recipient, and religion in general, in other ways. There are many ways by which the human being may be brought to a better realization of the truth and comfort to be found in religion, but this clasp style of evangelization will never make converts to any creed, and those who look upon it from this point of view will not hesitate to break the chain by saying their prayers and not writing them out and mailing them anonymously to their friends.

Cantrill Tobacco Bill.

A year's work by Representative J. C. Cantrill, seconded by Senator Bradley, in behalf of special legislation for Kentucky tobacco growers, was successfully consummated last Tuesday when the Senate unanimously passed the Cantrill tobacco bill. This provides that semi-annually the Director of the Census must report on the amount of unmanufactured tobacco in the hands of manufacturers and dealers, so that growers may know market conditions and fix their prices accordingly. The House also passed the bill unanimously this session, December 8th last, and tomorrow it will come to a vote. The bill provides for two reports annually to the Director of the Census—one in May and the other in October—of all stocks of leaf tobacco in the hands of all manufacturers and dealers in tobacco in the country. The Director of the Census shall send to these dealers and manufacturers certain blank forms, to be filled and returned at once. If not returned as required by law inside of 10 days after May 1 and October 1 heavy penalties are imposed, including jail sentences, and equally heavy penalties are provided for making false reports of stocks on hand.

Porto Rico's New Wonder.

From far away Porto Rico came reports of a wonderful new discovery that is believed will vastly benefit the people. Raymond T. Marchant, of Barceloneta, writes: "Dr. King's New Discovery is doing splendid work here. It cured me about five times of terrible coughs, also my brother of a severe cold in his chest and more than 30 others who used it on my advice. We hope the great medicine will yet be sold in every drug store in Porto Rico." For throat and lung troubles it has no equal. A trial will convince you of its merit. 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free. Guaranteed by all druggists.

DE LAVAL CREAM SEPARATOR

A Money Maker and Saver

Soon Pays for Itself

Occasionally the intending buyer of a cream separator who has but a small amount of ready cash to invest is tempted to put his money into one of the so-called "cheap" machines.

Why pay your hard-earned money for a "cheap," trashy machine, which is always most expensive in the end, when you can buy a reliable De Laval upon such liberal terms that it will more than earn its cost while you are paying for it.

When you buy a De Laval you have positive assurance that your machine will be good for at least twenty years of service, during which time it will save every possible dollar for you, and earn its original cost over and over again.

If it is not convenient for you to make full payment at time of purchase, we can arrange for you to make a partial payment, and pay the balance on such liberal terms that your machine will more than save its cost while you are paying for it.

SOONER OR LATER YOU WILL BUY A DE LAVAL

AND HE SANG

Full For The Shore Nallie, Pull For The Shore,
Heed Not The Rollings, Waters
But Pull For The Shore.

Last Friday afternoon Dr. Peddicord was called to Charles Moore's, who lives above Lima-burg near the headwaters of Gunpowder creek, and while there a heavy rain fell which increased to dangerous proportions the large volume of water that was then passing down the creek. Knowing that the creek and wild rise rapidly the doctor started home immediately after the shower and proceeded without incident until he was making his last crossing just above the residence of John Aylor. Reaching the Aylor crossing he figured that it would at least run into his buggy, but as there appeared to be no current he prepared to forde the stream by rolling up his lap robe and placing it on the buggy cushion, upon which he seated himself and gave his nag the word to go which it did readily, but had taken only a few steps when the water began running over her back. The only way to pull for the opposite shore, which was easy to do as the water was dead. When the shore was reached the doctor had succeeded in keeping his feet dry by placing them on top of the buggy dash, but the rolled lap robe had not elevated him sufficiently to keep the water out of his vest pockets. When he reached home and went to remove his case of instruments which were in the back of the buggy he discovered that the turgid stream had claimed them, but he congratulated himself because of nothing worse happening him. When the doctor passed W. L. B. Rouse's Mr. Rouse warned him of the danger ahead but he was so anxious to get home that he took his chance and was about to pronounce Mr. Rouse a false prophet when the raging stream began to threaten to lift him from his vehicle, but he is now willing to concede that Mr. Rouse is the better posted in the creek's condition following a heavy down pour.

James W. Waters, of Lima-burg neighborhood, found the case of instruments some time late Friday afternoon, and notified Dr. Peddicord, but they were found some distance up the creek from the last ford, showing that they had been washed out of the buggy before the doctor got his bath.

In renewing his subscription for the Recorder, Waller Ryle, writes from Petaluma, California:

"I am now working on a chicken ranch for J. E. Ryle, near Novato. He has about 2,700 laying hens and 4,500 young chickens. He has been in the poultry business quite a while and understands it pretty well. He has been a paying industry here for many years, and there is one hatchery just outside of the city limits said to be the largest in the world, its capacity being 15,000. Feed is getting so high I expect some of the chicken men will become discouraged and quit if the price continues to increase. One hen is laying about 1,000 eggs a day now, having dropped off in the last week from 1,400 a day. This decrease is on account of a cold wind that has been blowing for the last week, coming, I suppose, off of snow. I never saw anything like it all the time I have been in California."

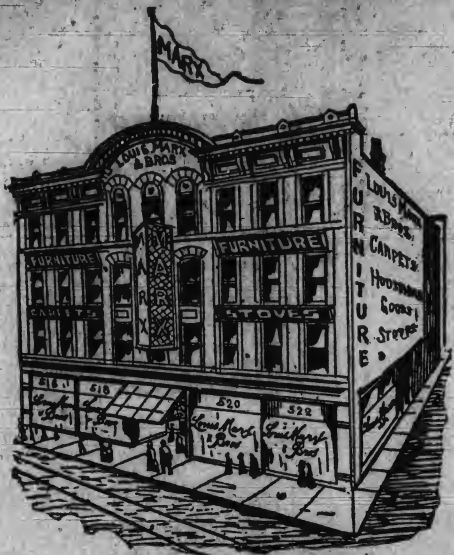

"I surely appreciate the Recorder and could not do without it, as I like to hear what is going on in my old Kentucky home."

In Covington from May 20th to 26th, inclusive, there will occur an event under the title of the Covington Shopping Carnival, an occurrence which has never taken place in that city's history. The event is being inaugurated by the Young Men's League and will be participated in by every merchant in the entire city. It will be a huge shopping week and the merchants will price articles at very specially priced articles. A complete scholar ship in bookkeeping or shorthand is offered to the League to the boy presenting the best one hundred word composition on the Covington Shopping Carnival. Other interesting events will occur. Kentuckians should buy in their own state and Covington bids for their patronage.

The recent marriage of Duncan Riley, son of Mr. and Mrs. B. L. Riley, of Rockwood, avenue, and Miss Eula Owen, of Middletown, is of much interest to Dayton friends. The ceremony took place last Wednesday in Middletown, and Dayton relatives knew nothing of the event until the bride and groom came to spend the week-end with Mr. Riley's parents. For the present they are to make their home with the bride's mother in Middletown. Mr. Riley is a graduate of Steele's High school and has many friends in the city. At present he is connected with the American Rolling Mill in Middletown, where he is an electrician. Dayton, O. papers.

Two Profits From the Same Land at the Same Time

THE more fertile your land, the greater its value and the larger the crop. Farm land is made fertile by evenly spreading the proper quantity of stable manure. Therefore, the farmer who uses an IHC manure spreader collects a double profit. He markets heavier crops and his land is made more valuable.

To find out how this is done, see your local dealer and have him show you an

IHC Manure Spreader Kemp 20th Century Corn King or Cloverleaf

The local dealer will show you why an IHC spreader does the best work—why it makes the most of the manure it spreads. The service he can render you is worth dollars to you and it costs you nothing. Buy an IHC manure spreader from your local dealer and collect a double profit from your farm.

Don DeGozee

The Belgian Draft Horse, foaled in 1908, will make the present season at E. J. Aylor's place, one and one-half miles from Hebron, Boone County, Ky., at $10.00 to insure a colt to stand up and suck, money due when colt comes or the mare is parted with or leaves the county.

Don DeGozee, despite his great size and weight, well balanced throughout, perfectly proportioned and symmetrically built. He has as light action as a stallion of much smaller type, and his disposition is much better than is usually found in horses of blood strains. He is a beautiful dark sorrel, 17 hands high, weighs 1,700 pounds, has a broad, flat foot, heavy bone, fine style and action. This great breed of draft horses is especially known for better action than another draft horse for heavy, good bone and good hoofs, and gentle, kind workers.

Don DeGozee's dam Della Wire, brown mare, the great draft mare of Campbell County, Kentucky, whose Belgian Stud Book number is 2188, 2187, bred by Mr. Baillieux E. de Goeze, sire by Morton (812), he by Brilliant (708), out of Colette (708), dam Catherine DeGoeze (21083), she by Lion (768), out of Marie (2421).

Great care will be taken to prevent accidents but we will not be responsible should any occur.

The High Class Saddle and Harness Stallion, BELL'S FITZSIMMONS.

2844 A. S. B. A.

Will make the season of 1912 at the W. L. Norman Stock Farm at Walton, Ky., and if you want a show horse breed to him.

BELL'S FITZSIMMONS is a dark bay, 16 hands, weighs 1300 pounds, with three white feet, snip and star, and lots of style and action. He was sired by

Miss Berry is also the dam of Woodland Chief, one of the finest show horses in Kentucky. Woodland Chief is a full brother to Bell's Fitzsimmons and a full brother to Rhoderick, and one of the finest geldings ever showed, and sold to a party in Texas for $1,000.

Bell's Fitzsimmons is also the sire of the champion walk-trot gelding, Mat Coyne, showed at the Horse Shows in the fall of 1909 and sold for $2,500, and also the champion harness mare showed by C. O. Harris.

L. T. Anderson, of Mayville, one of the largest dealers in the State, says some of the highest class hot-see he has handled have been by Bell's Fitzsimmons.

The greatest show, harness and saddle horses of my state have sprung from the loins of Harrison Chief and Indian Chief. Where can you find a horse of better breeding than Bell's Fitzsimmons? He has been a winning show horse ever since a suckling colt, and has proven himself a successful sire. Some of the highest priced saddle, harness and walk-trot horses that have left the State have been sired by him.

Personal care over all stock. Mares left on good pasture at 10c a day at owners' risk.

$15.00 to insure a mare in foal money due when the fact is ascertained or the mare is parted with.

JOHN HANSLER, C. R. BEST, Walton, Ky.

Also prepared to break colts and handle Saddle and Harness horses.

The Fine High Bred Percheron Stallion,

PRINCE OLSEN

Will make the season of 1912 at my farm two miles west of Walton, Boone County, Ky., at $10.00 to insure a living colt. Persons parting with mares forfeit the insurance money. A lien retained on colt until season money is paid.

PRINCE OLSEN was foaled in 1907, and is one model of his class. He weighs 1620 pounds and is nearly 17 hands in height. He is a beautiful black, and is a picture of symmetry and fine points of the draft horse. His breeding qualities are excellent.

PRINCE OLSEN was sired by Blackmon, a registered Percheron stallion owned by Ole G. Olsen, of Shabbona Grove, Illinois, where he was foaled in 1907, and from whom he was purchased by me last spring, selecting this horse over many others because of his excellent qualities. Prince Olsen is eligible to registry, and is one of the highest bred draft horses ever in this section of the country. The dam of Prince Olsen was a high bred registered Percheron mare, I feel that farmers and breeders will make no mistake in breeding to Prince Olsen as it means a good, strong colt that will meet every requirement on the farm. One of the lacking features of our horses is the size and strength. With the well bred Percheron like Prince Olsen these essentials are fully incorporated.

Come and see the horse and inspect his good points and you will breed to him.

Also at the same place and under the same conditions I will offer for public service my fine breeding jack.

BEN

is a black Jack with meaty points, six years old, 15-3 hands high, large bone and big body, very long ear, and has proven himself to be one of the best breeders in Kentucky. His mules are quick sellers and several have been sold at $25 at weaning time. His mares will be taken to prevent accidents but I will not be responsible should any occur.

JOSEPH READNOUR, Walton, Ky.

Harrison Prince

HARRISON PRINCE is a chestnut stallion, 15 hands high, 4 years old, has a large black face, two white feet, and is the perfect type of a saddle horse with fine finish and action, a champion in his class from a family of show horses on both sides, and is a show horse himself, and should sire show horses. His sire is Dandy Jim, 2d, 1831, the well known show horse by McChieff, 1451, by Rex McDonald, 883, by Rex Denmark, 840, he by Crigger's Denmark by Old Denmark Chief.

His dam, Mary Neal, 1806, also a show mare, by Boyd Wilks, by Fayette Wilks, 1st dam, Skiddie, by Washington Denmark, Jr., by Washington Denmark 64.

EGRA L. AYLOR, Rabbit Hash, Ky.

HIGH VINE, No. 2733.

By Highland Gaius 1677. Grand sire, Highland Denmark, 730. Dam, Bessie Sahle, 4832, by Shapshire Kentucky Squirrel, 1855, and dam, Ida May by Fayette Denmark, 60; 3d dam, Maxey by Granger; 4th dam, Mare by Expert, 71.

High Vine is a fine painted Saddle Stallion, eight years old, 16 hands high, and weighs 1200 lbs., is a rich golden chestnut in color, and a perfect model in conformation. He is a uniform breeder and reproduces his own kind. The show record of his colts is unequalled by the colts of any sire in this section of country. His colts have been shown at various fairs and have never been defeated in their class, and in addition awakened public admiration everywhere. In several instances the owners of High Vine colts have been offered $200 for the colts at weaning time, and this handsome price was refused by the owners. No one who has not believed the colts to promise much better as they developed. There must be something in the breeding when $200 offers for weaning colts are rejected by owners who are governed by business principles in the sale of the products of their farm. Take a look at any of High Vine's colts and you will see the style and attractive qualities that make the price in a sale.

HIGH VINE will make the season at the stable of W. Lee Gaines, midway between Walton and Richmond, Boone county, Ky., at $20.00 to insure a live foal season money due if mare is parted with after being bred. No responsibility for accidents. Make engagements ahead of his services are limited, and it is very annoying delays.

For the accommodation of those from a distance Mr. Gaines will pasture a few mares at $2.50 per month, with best facilities for their care. Parties desiring to pasture their mares will be given the owner of the High Vine colt exhibited at the Florence fair at the High Vine colt season.

W. LEE GAINES, Florence, Ky.

DR. T. B. CASTLEMAN, DENTIST.

Having just received from Prescott, Arizona, where I have been to investigate the claims of the Fortune Mining Co., in which you and a great many people are stockholders, I thought perhaps, you would like to hear my opinion of the mines and our investment and if you will publish the following in your paper all the stockholders may read what I have to say.

Upon arriving at the Fortune Mines, Saturday morning, April 13th, I proceeded at once with Mr. A. W. Davis, Vice President and Secretary, to investigate the mines and the work which had been and is being done at the present time. I found that Mr. Davis and Capt. Collins had not exaggerated in their claims for the mines one bit, in fact, they did not make their claims strong enough, for I found everything just exactly as they represented it, only better. I went through the tunnel which is 207 feet long, also went down the shaft, they are now sinking, which is 152 feet deep. They are following closely the ledge of ore which widens as they go down, being now about 35 inches in width. The men work night and day, Sunday included. I find Mr. Davis is conducting the work to the best of his ability; the money being put in the ground and not over head for any outside show, and I feel confident we will get good returns for every dollar we put in.

I met Mr. Meeks, president of the company, and Mr. Dillon, the treasurer, and will say they are gentlemen of the highest type and both have the interest of the company at heart. I feel now that it will be but a short time till we all will be more than pleased with our investment and wish to praise Mr. A. W. Davis and Capt. Collins for presenting the opportunity to us. I had asays made of the surface ore, which runs $28.30 to the ton; also from the bottom of the tunnel which runs $28.55 to the ton. F. M. COX, Aurora, Ind.

In his Boston speech President Taft said: "Mr. Roosevelt ought not to be selected the candidate of any party. He may now be paying the way, if successful in this campaign, to remain the Chief Executive of the nation for as many terms as his natural life would permit."

"If Mr. Roosevelt is necessary to the Government now, why not later?" "One who so lightly regards constitutional principles and the independence of the judiciary—one who is so naturally impatient of legal restraints—could not safely be intrusted with successive presidential terms."

"By misstatements thruout the country Mr. Roosevelt has led many people to believe charges made against me and my administration." "Mr. Roosevelt has failed to live up to his policy of a square deal and violated a solemn promise to the American people not to be a candidate for a third term. That promise, and the treatment of it only throw an informing light on the value that ought to be attached to any promise he may make."

"Mr. Roosevelt's Columbus speech sent a thrill of alarm thru all the members of the community." In renewing his subscription to the Recorder, B. L. Stephens, of Ashland, Kansas, writes: "We have just gotten through by far the worst winter I ever saw. Cattle losses here were heavy, in some instances over 50 per cent. Was fortunate enough not to lose many. What is excellent and acreage large; grain is getting good. All the Boone county people out here are doing well. Regards to all my old friends in Boone county."

The Burlington pupils who attended the educational tournament at Walton, last week, returned home singing praises of the citizens of that town, and their cordial greeting and the magnificent manner in which they were entertained during their stay were remembered by them in that little city will be an event in their lives to which memory will always revert with pleasure.

Yesterday's reports from Massachusetts had Taft and Roosevelt neck and neck in the running primaries held the day before, but when the final count is made there will be margin enough for the friends of the winner to prove thereby that the campaign of the loser has collapsed.

GRADED SCHOOL

TOURNAMENT

Held At Walton The Greatest Educational Event Ever Held In Boone County.

Eight Schools Enter Contestants In Studies and Athletics.

Walton was the center of educational interest in northern Kentucky for three days last week, Tuesday and Saturday, inclusive. Teachers and students from Dry Ridge, Crittenden, Independence, Warsaw, Carrollton, Verona and Burlington were there participating in the contests. Distinguished visitors from over the state and from Cincinnati were there interested in the educational work. People from far and near, who had friends either in the schools or living in Walton, flocked to the little city.

The contests in Declamation and Reading and Chorus work, which were held in the evening sessions, were well attended and exhibited talent and preparation of the highest order. Examinations were held in most of the High School and Seventh and Eighth grade branches. In athletics, running, jumping and base ball received attention, the entire day, Saturday, being given to those events.

The people of Walton, long noted for their old-fashioned Kentucky hospitality, took care of the visitors royally. There were a hundred contestants besides the base ball teams, teachers, the judges and examiners and other visitors. The meeting will long be remembered by all those attending for the entertainment given them by Walton people.

At the Directors meeting held on Friday evening, Prof. E. L. Dix, of Burlington, was re-elected president; Prof. Lucy, of Independence, was elected vice-president and Prof. Gruell, of Dry Ridge, secretary. The Tournament is to be held at Dry Ridge next year in the month of May.

Much credit is due Prof. Prather the retiring Secretary, for the able manner in which he conducted the Tournament this year.

There is much evidence that many good results will follow the inauguration of this annual meet among the schools of Northern Kentucky. It will, doubtless, cause more thorough work on all the schools consistently. It will promote friendliness and cooperation among the various schools.

OUR SHOWING AT THE TOURNAMENT.

Is it possible for a High School depending upon the common country schools for its recruits, to produce a grade of scholarship equal to that of the schools supported by the regular eight grades and consistently taught for nine months in the year? This is a question that has interested the founders and promoters of the Boone County High School. The Tournament recently held at Walton seemed to offer an opportunity to make a comparison of our work with that of the long established schools with their graded systems and as such was watched with interest. Considering some disadvantages under which we were placed we were more than pleased with the results. We now have more than five weeks of the present term before it is finished, consequently we had completed four of the studies of our course at the time the Tournament was held. In only four of those in which we made entries had we completed the year's work. In three of these our students took first place. Of course it is not implied that we would have done the same in all the other branches under similar circumstances, indeed it is certain that we would not but the fact is somewhat significant. Again, the line of work which we especially emphasize as an agricultural school was not represented. Agriculture, Physical Geography, Botany, Chemistry, etc., were not represented. But in spite of these facts five of our nine contestants in studies were in either first or second place—three first, two second. Our showing was small as compared with the magnificent showing of our neighbor, Walton, but we are exceedingly pleased with our first attempt and with the best good nature and good wishes for all the other schools in the Tournament, we shall make preparations next year for a larger representation and shall contest every niche of the ground with our severest efforts.

BASE BALL CHAMPIONS.

The B. H. S. Base Ball Club won the championship of the Northern Kentucky Tournament. The team is now in better condition for playing than ever before. In the near future they will try conclusions with the Erlanger school team. It has always been difficult for them to get games with teams that were strictly school teams as many schools are short of material, but with teams of this grade they are likely now to hold their own with the best of them.

The broad jump which won the medal for Burlington was made by John Walton. Details will be announced later.

Following is the record of points scored by the respective schools:

Walton 113
Burlington 49
Independence 38
Crittenden 32
Dry Ridge 34
Carrollton 30
Warsaw 10
Walton having made the largest number of points received the library awarded for that achievement.

CHAPTER V.

The Encounter.

Betty Malroy had hidden into the square's yard during the progress of the trial and when Yancy and Hannibal came from the house she beckoned the Scratch Hiller to her.

"You are not going to lose your nephew, are you, Mr. Yancy?" she asked eagerly, when Yancy stood at her side.

"No, ma'am." But his sense of elation was plainly tempered.

"I am very glad. I rode out to the Hill to say good-by to Hannibal and to you, but they said you were here and that the trial was today."

Captain Murrell, with Crenshaw and the equine, came from the house, and Murrell's swarthy face lit up at sight of the girl. Yancy would have yielded his place, but Betty detained him.

"Are you going away, ma'am?" she asked with concern.

"Yes—to my home in west Tennessee," and a cloud crossed her smooth brow.

"But ain't you ever coming back, Miss Betty?" asked Hannibal rather fearfully.

"Oh, I hope so, dear." She turned to Yancy. "I wonder you don't leave the Hill, Mr. Yancy. You could so easily go where Mr. Bladen would never find you. Haven't you thought of this?"

"That are a p'int," agreed Yancy slowly. "Might I ask you what parts you'd specially recommend?" lifting his grave eyes to hers.

"It would really be the sensible thing to do," said Betty. "I am sure you would like west Tennessee—they say you are a great hunter." Yancy smiled almost guiltily.

"Mr. Yancy, if you should cross the mountains, remember I live near Memphis. Belle Plain is the name of the plantation—it's not far from Hannibal—just don't forget—Belle Plain."

"I won't forget, and mebbey you will see us there one of these days. Sho' I've seen mighty little of the world—about as far as a dog can trot in a couple of hours!"

Betty glanced toward the equine and Mr. Crenshaw. They were standing near the bars that gave entrance to the lane. Murrell had left them and was walking briskly down the road toward Crenshaw's store, where his horse was tied. She bent down and gave Yancy her slim white hand.

"Good-by, Mr. Yancy—lift Hannibal so that I can kiss him!" Yancy swung the child aloft. "I think you are such a nice little boy, Hannibal—

"I Don't know but What I Should Pull You Out of That Saddle and Twist Your Neck." And touching her horse lightly with the whip she rode away at a gallop.

"She sho'ly is a lady!" said Yancy, staring after her. "And we mustn't forget Memphis or Belle Plain, Nev."

When Betty Malroy rode away from Squire Balaam's Murrell galloped after her. Presently she heard the beat of his horse's hoofs as he came pounding along the sandy road, and glanced back over her shoulder. With an exclamation of displeasure she reined in her horse. Murrell quickly gained a place at her side.

"I suppose Ferra is at the Barony?" he said, drawing his horse down to a walk.

"I believe he is," said Betty with a curt little air.

"May I ride with you?" he gave her a swift glance. She nodded indifferently and would have urged her horse into a gallop again, but he made a gesture of protest. "Don't—or I shall think you are still running away," he said with a short laugh.

"I am not," she said with an asked, "I am not at the trial?" she asked.

"I am not at the trial?" she asked.

away from Yancy."

"Oh, Yancy will have his hands full with that later—so will Bladen," he added, significantly. He studied her out of those deeply sunken eyes of his in which no shadow of youth lingered, for men such as he reached their prime early, and it was a swift by—yonder. "Ferra tells me you are going to west Tennessee?" he said at length.

"Yes."

"I know your half-brother, Tom Ware—I know him very well."

"So you know Tom?" she observed, and frowned slightly. Tom was her guardian, and her memories of him were not satisfactory. A burly, unshaven man through his character.

"You've spent much of your time up north?" suggested Murrell.

"Four years. I've been at school, you know. That's where I met Judith Ferra."

"I hope you'll like west Tennessee. It's a bit raw compared with what you've been accustomed to in the north. You haven't been back in all those four years?" Betty shook her head. "Nor seen Tom—nor any one from out yonder?" For some reason a little tinge of color had crept into Betty's cheeks. "Will you let me renew our acquaintance at Belle Plain? I shall be in west Tennessee before the summer is over; probably I shall leave here within a week," he said, bending toward her. His glance dwelt on her face and on the playful lines of her figure, and his senses swam.

"I imagine you will be welcome at Belle Plain. You are Tom's friend," Murrell bit his lip, and then laughed as his mind conjured up a picture of the cherished Tom. Suddenly he reached out and rested his hand on hers.

"Betty—if I might think—," he began, but his tongue stumbled. His love-making was usually of a savage sort, but some quality in the girl held him in check. Betty drew away from him, an angry color on her cheeks and an angry light in her eyes. "Forgive me, Betty," murmured Murrell, but his heart was against his ribs, and passing sense he surges through him. "Don't you know what I'm trying to tell you?" he whispered. Betty gathered up her reins. "Not yet—," he cried, and again he rested a heavy hand on hers.

"Let me go—let me go!" cried Betty indignantly.

"No—not yet!" He urged his horse still nearer and gathered her close. "You've got to hear me. I've loved you since the first moment I rested my eyes on you—and, by God, you shall love me in return!" He felt her struggle to free herself from his grasp with a sense of savage triumph.

Bruce Carrington, on his way back to Fayetteville from the Forks, came about a turn in the road. Betty saw a tall, handsome fellow in the first flush of manhood; Carrington, an angry girl struggling in a man's grasp.

At sight of the new-comer, Murrell, with an oath, released Betty, who, striking her horse with the whip, galloped down the road toward the Barony. As she fled past Carrington she bent low in her saddle.

"Don't let him follow me!" she gasped, and Carrington, striding forward, caught Murrell's horse by the bit.

"Let go!" roared Murrell, and a murderous light shot from his eyes.

"I don't know but I should pull you out of that saddle and twist your neck!" said Carrington hotly. Murrell's face underwent a swift change.

"You're a bold fellow to force your way into a lover's quarrel," he said quietly. Carrington's arm dropped at his side. Perhaps, after all, it was that.

Still Knocking.

The reader will know that the following is from the Louisville Courier Journal without being told "Democracy on trial. Kentucky is on trial. The people themselves are on trial. Never were issues of more transcendent import, possibilities of more teaching bound up in a State convention than the Democratic party will be called upon to meet here in Louisville the coming 26th of May."

Although local in kind even the State organization will be National alike in its character. Its belonging and its bearing. The Counties alone and their best men here. Kentucky's Delegation in Congress should be called home by each Congressional District. Kentucky needs Democracy needs the very fullest knowledge, the widest experience, the highest, noblest, most responsible leadership.

The discredited file-leaders of the Haly-Beckham combination, who rattle around making deals and dickers and peddling offices, under the selfish hand and heartless rule which have supplanted old-fashioned chivalry and honor old-fashioned faith and generosity, old-fashioned Democracy, are already organized to cheat the popular volition and rob the people of their own.

If Gov. McCreary has not actually put him self at the head of these mercenary and mountebanks—advancing ulterior objects of his own to advance and even thus early looking to still further preferment—he must know that they are massed behind him. He must know that his fame and the integrity of his great office, have been and are being put to the service of the group of machine politicians who, having debauched our public life for a dozen years, would crystallize and perpetuate their power in his name.

"Five years ago these men swindled him out of his return to the Senate by an audacious box primary unexampled in shameless corruption. The Courier-Journal fought them then as it is fighting them now. They wrecked the party and lost the State. Finding it to their interest to help him to the Governorship, they are preparing to give him a new campaign for the Senate two years hence, the double-cross they keep in cold storage for the victims whom they make a rule to decorate with flowers before committing them to the bone-yard and the dogs."

Such is the milk in the cocoanut offered the boys in the trenches to drink by the dark-lantern crew of the unholy Haly-Beckham alliance."

John R. Staton, Joyce, Ky., had an exceptional severe attack of whooping cough. He says: "It had not been for Foley's Honey and Tar Compound I would have been compelled to quit work. Instead, I never missed a day, and Foley's Honey and Tar Compound gave me instant relief and is the only cough medicine we ever use. Contains no opiates." For sale at Jones' Drug Store, Walton, Ky.

It looks very much like the Democrats will elect President this fall if they know any politics, but it will be very much like them in the past if they do the wrong thing at the right time.

GREATEST MEDICINE ON EARTH

A prominent citizen of Evansville, Ind., writes:—"I was ill for five months with a pulmonary trouble, and had the best of doctors. I had hemorrhages and was in a very bad way. Through the advice of a friend I tried Vinol, and I feel that it saved my life. It is the greatest medicine on earth. I have advised others to try Vinol, and they have had the same results." (Name furnished on request.)

We want every one in this vicinity who is troubled with chronic colds, coughs, or pulmonary troubles, to come and get a bottle of Vinol.

If it does not get to the seat of trouble, heal the inflammation and stop the cough, we will cheerfully return every cent paid us for it. This shows our faith and proves that you take chances.

CALIFORNIA LETTER.

Dear Boone Co. Friends:—

Here I am in California a long ways from home, but it just seems like a stones throw and you could hit Boone County. Our trip here was delightful, scenery grand all the way thru. We came the Central Route. There wasn't any of the states that came up with California (except Kentucky) that we came through.

We stopped a day and night with Uncle Cy Bruce and family who live in Liberty, Mo. He hasn't forgotten he was once a Kentuckian; has the same Kentucky hospitality. We had the pleasure of meeting and being with Will and George Smith, who are taking a ministerial course in William Jewell College. We also had the pleasure of going through William Jewell College which has fine buildings and grounds. There are a great many Kentuckians there. William Smith was our second. He took us through the library which came up to any I ever saw. We went through the catacombs of the building which makes you think of ghosts without reading about them. The gymnasium, too, was nice. We saw a few stunts of the boys there. We left there that evening about 3 p. m. for Kansas City, where we proceeded on our way through Kansas. We passed thru what I would call Prairie Dog Town. I never saw so many in one place before. They had little dug outs just like a great many people we saw staying in their under ground houses, only they didn't vanish quite so quick. In Colorado they were having a western hurricane flavored with a blizzard. The wind was something fierce. Denver, Colorado is one of the windiest towns I ever saw. I suppose it is because it is so high, 5,123 feet above sea level. We were delayed one night there. I think they must have put weights on the houses to keep them straight. We were delayed a while in Hugo, Colorado, on account of a small bridge being burned. I think Hugo must be the original home of the wild west stories. It surely looked like it. The people there were the same as the place. Every other place there was a saloon and the other places were going to be.

There was a Champ Clark man, who stayed there a little to long I think, he came through the several cars buying everything. He said that he had plenty of Champ Clark money. That wasn't working but the whiskey was.

Further on we had to wait till they could remove a freight train that had been blown over. It wasn't such a bad thing, two or three cars turned over. Ogden, Utah, is a fine city. Great Salt Lake is just fine. It is about forty miles one way and eighty the other. There is a railroad bridge over it. You can see Salt Lake City at a distance from this lake. All of that water there and not a living thing in it. It is six times more salt than the sea. We saw great piles of salt everywhere.

Nevada and California are places for scenery. We saw plenty of Indians. They looked pretty natural, some of them compared with the pictures. We passed by an Indian square in the woods making baskets.

As soon as we arrived in California we saw all the flowers in bloom. The gardens were just loaded with vegetables of all kinds. We could see the mountains capped with snow, yet it was warm where we were.

We arrived in Reddley pretty tired. David Ryle was at the station, and we drove about five miles to Soto Ryle's place. He has a grape ranch he is tending. Floyd Stephens was over and stayed all night with us. He says he is not a bit home sick and is going to stay till after the fair in 1915. He has a nice looking bank book for the length of time he has been here. He weighs 160 pounds and is in perfect health. He is going to work for Will Ryle, who is on a fruit ranch about 15 miles from here. David Ryle and I went fishing in Walitoke Lake, and caught several fine fish. This is a fine place for fish. There is a nice place to put them at everything is much higher in price here than in Kentucky; especially meat. I expect to go to the mountains the first of May with several other persons.

Only A Fire Hero

but the crowd cheered as, with burned hands, he held up a small round box, "Follows!" he shouted, "this 'Buckler's' Arma. Salvo hold, has everything - beat for burns." Right! also for boils, ulcers, sores, pimples, eczema, cuts, sprains, bruises. Surest cure. It subdues inflammation, kills pain. Only 25 cents at all drug-gists.

The campaign in which President Taft and Col. Roosevelt are engaged is enough to disgust the American people. Never before has the like been witnessed in a campaign for Presidential nomination. It should really defeat the nomination of both of them, and in case either is nominated the country should repudiate him by administering to him a severe rebuke by an overwhelming defeat.

Ex-Governor Hadley, of Missouri, "showed" the Taft people in the Missouri State Republican convention. He organized the convention as a Roosevelt body when the Taft leaders felt doubly sure that Hadley and his gang of insurgents were not in to the extent of it a little bit.

Flavors in Milk.

The abnormal or injurious flavors in milk are of two kinds; first, those due to feed eaten by the cow; second those due to contamination.

The first kind is scientifically spoken of as feed flavor and is due to the cow eating large quantities of turnips, onions, cabbage, beets, ragweed, etc.

This ill flavor is due to volatile oils contained in the strongly flavored feeds. Such flavors leave the animal through the different secretions and excretions of the body.

When feeding is done immediately after milking these feed flavors largely pass off through channels, or secretions, than the milk and are not noticeable. It is also maintained that if some rough forage be fed along with much feeds that produce ill flavor in milk, it assists in obviating such flavors.

It is within the power of the dairyman to obviate the second flavor of contamination. This class of flavor is largely due to contaminating bacteria. There are many, each giving its peculiar flavor. Another contaminating flavor is due to the absorption of certain strong odors.

The cause of the contamination of milk is largely due to lack of perfect cleanliness with the milking utensils, surroundings, methods of delivery and personal cleanliness.

The udder and adjacent parts should be washed with clean water and wiped dry with a clean, dry towel. The hands and the clothing of the milkman should be clean. Bottles, buckets, etc., should be sterilized with live steam and turned upside down so as to prevent the collection of dust, which always contains germs and mold spores. Small top nails should be compulsory by law.—B. F. Kaupp, Colorado Agricultural College.

"MILK CEMENT PAINT."

"Skin-milk paint" has recently been going the rounds of the agricultural press. Skin-milk will make a fairly good paint or a wash, but whole-milk paint is much better. The grease in the milk is what sets the paint. The following is a formula which has done wonders. It has proven far more effective for rough work than best lead and oil paint. Mix a couple of pounds of standard Portland cement in a gallon of milk—sweet or sour—and colored paint powder of your suit. The cement is heavy and will sink, so keep stirring with every brush full, since it is the most colored paint powder of your suit. The cement is heavy and will sink, so keep stirring with every brush full, since it is the most colored paint powder of your suit. It would surprise you to know of the great good that is being done by Buckler's Tablets. Darius Downey, of Newburg Junction, N. B., writes, "My wife has been using Chamberlain's Tablets and finds them very effective and are doing her lots of good." If you have any trouble with your stomach or bowels give them a trial. For sale by J. W. Berkshire & Sons, and E. E. Kelly.

NOTICE.

To my friends who have booked their mares to the young Scottish Draft Horse, AVONDALE LADDIE, (1899) Reg. Vol. 18:

This colt will be allowed to serve a few good mares which are already booked to him, at the reasonable sum of $15 to insure a live foal, money due when the fact is known or the mare is paired with. I shall endeavor to exercise the best my ability to avoid accidents, but shall not be responsible should any occur. Description: Laddie is a dark dapple bay with white stripes in face, right hind leg white almost to the hock. He was sired by imported Postman; his dam, imported Lady Madison. Laddie is a proper made colt, standing on the best of feet and legs with a couple of good ends and a powerful body. He is a graceful mover with faultless action and he is a typical Clydesdale of the true Scottish pattern and one of the best bred of the west of the Atlantic Ocean. Remember the Clydesdale is the coming popular horse for the American farmer, the result of experience and education. Over 80 per cent of the highest awards were decidedly in favor of Clydesdales shown in harness both in Europe and America, this being in comparison with the best of other draft breeds. This statement is on record and can not be disputed. Note the season will commence in the middle of May and end in the middle of August, 1912. For further particulars write or see me. HARRY ACKEMYRE. Kentwood Farms for Sale.

If you knew of a county that produced $723,250.00 worth of Strawberries, $188,000.00 worth of vegetables, $625,000.00 worth of Corn, and other valuable crops in 1911. If you knew of a County where winters are mild and short, the summers long and pleasant. If you knew you could get such land as this for on terms of $20.00 per acre down, and $4.50 per acre per year, and that you could buy as little as ten acres of it, wouldn't you like to see such a country? If you were sure you could harvest fifty bushels of oats per acre in May, and from the same ground cut two tons of clover in October the same year, and get more for it than you could in Boone County, wouldn't you like to see such land and own some of it? If you knew you could plant Irish potatoes in February and sell 135 bushels per acre in time to plant same land in corn, and sell forty bushels per acre, would you, honest now, wouldn't you like to own some of that ground? On terms you could pay for it. Of course you would. Do you want the proof? We can furnish it.

Twenty-four Hours.

We say to you, such a country is within twenty-four hours ride of Boone County, sit down and write to-day for illustrated folder, fully describing our proposition, its free. The first twenty answering this advertisement will receive a photograph of a Kentwood Strawberry plant, and its wonderful yield. We will visit Kentwood Farm, on May the 7th, and again May 21st. "From the door of the tavern there
black-haired and bull-necked, and there was about him a certain shaggy vigilance which recent toilet performed at the horse trough had not served to mitigate.

"Howdy," he drawled.

"Howdy?" responded Mr. Yancy.
"Shall you stop here?" asked Murrell, sinking his voice. Yancy nodded his head. "Come put up," inquired Murell, turning to the tavern-keeper,
"I reckon that's what I'm here for," said Slosson. Murrell glanced about the empty yard. "Black," observed Slosson languidly. "Yes, sir, under" he only name for it." It was black;
proof he referred to the state of trade.
There were no other men to the other of the two men. As the eyes rested on Murrell, that gentleman raised the first three fingers of his right hand.
The gesture was ever so little, yet Mr.
seemed to have a tonic effect on Yancy.
Slosson. What might have developed into a smile had he not immediately suppressed it; twisted his bearded lips as he made an answering movement. "Eph, come here, you!" Slo-sson raised his voice. This call brought a half-grown black boy from back a corner of the tavern, to whom Murrell relinquished his horse. The boy shouldered the caplain over his shoulder, moving off in the direction of the bar.

"Come on, Nervy!" said Yancy following, and they all entered the tavern.

"Well, here's to the best of good cheer," said Murrell, as he raised his glass to his lips.

"Here," responded Yancy. "Here."
Murrell pulled out a roll of bills, and with which he tossed on the bar. Then after a moment's hesitation he detached a second bill from the roll and turned to Hannibal.

"Here, youngster—a present for you," he said good-naturedly. Hannibal took up the unexpected gift, and it edged to his Uncle Sol's side.

"Thank you, sir," said the boy.

"Let's have another drink," suggested Murrell.

Presently Hannibal stole out into the yard. He still held the bill in his hand, for he did not quite know how to dispose of it. After a few minutes contemplating this matter for a moment he snatched it carefully in one corner of a handkerchief.

In the tavern the three men were chatting—Murrell with the idea that the more Yancy came under the influence of Slosson's corn whisky the more disposed would he be to resist. Mr. Yancy on his part believed that if Murrell went to bed reason-- ably drunk he would sleep late and give him the opportunity he coveted, to quit the tavern unobserved at break of day.

"When 'yo' got to feelin' like sleep, young boss, Ma's Slosson he says i' go to my 'nephew's' chamber." It was Slosson's boy Eph.

"Yes, you can show me my chamber," Hannibal said.

Eph secured a tin candle-stick with half-brim candle in it and led the way into the passage back of the bar.
They mounted a flight of stairs and descended a narrow hall. Then they pushed open the door and entered a room—the back of the building, and Eph punched upon the door or on his right.

"This heah's 'yo' chamber," he said, and preceding his companion into the room, placed the candle on a chair.

The moon was rising and Hannibal looked out the open window and glanced at the stars. For a moment he considered the night, not unaffected by its beauty, and, turning from the window, he raised his bundle and rode to the foot of the bed, where they would be at his way, kicked off his trousers, placed the candle and lay down.

"Yancy has been here more and more since we've been here," said Murrell, convinced as the evening passed that Murrell was bent on getting him killed, and suspicion mounted darkly in his brain.

"Have a drink with me!" cried Slo-sson, giving way to drunken laughter.
"No," said Yancy, dropping out, and leaving it about time of these here activities to come to an end. "I'm making some of going to bed now," said Yancy. He kept his eyes fixed on Murrell. He realized that if later could prevent it he was going to the bar. He never shifted his glance away more and more showing now, the captain's eyes saw back their challenge as he must his right hand under his coat.
His play—I don't know who you but, I know what you want!" said Yancy, the light in his frank gray eyes. Murrell laughed and as a forward step, Murrell to Slosson snatched up a heavy rod from the back of the bar and laid Yancy a murderous blow. A flash started cry escaped the victim; he struck out wildly he lurched toward Murrell, who

How long the boy slept he never knew, but he awoke with a start and a confused sense of things. Probably it was evidently very late, probably long after midnight—but where was his Uncle Bob?

He slipped back on his pillow intending to listen. A chilling terror gripped him fast and would not let him go, mounted to his brain.

Where was his Uncle Bob? Why didn't he come to bed? Memories of idle tales of men foolishly dealt with in the saloon and the gambling taverns flashed through his mind.

He slid from the bed, and for a strong moment stood cold and shivering. His every sense on the alert. With infinite caution he got into his trousers and again paused to listen, still fearing his least movement might arouse the guard.

He secured his key, unlocked the door, and was about to slip out.

Encumbered by his belongings, but with no mind to sacrifice them, he stepped out upon the shed and made his way down the slant of the roof to where he saved. He tossed his bundle to the ground and going down on his hands and knees, he left, letting the moonlight fall lightly against the side of the shed as he fled.

He shed as he left his hand, then he flung it flat on his stomach and, feet first, he struggled out into space. When he could no longer preserve his balance, he gave himself a shove away from the eaves and dropped clear of the building.

He recovered himself he was aware he heard a door open and close, and he threw himself prone on the ground, where the black shadow cast by the tavern hid him. At the same moment two dark figures came from about a corner of the building. He could just distinguish that they carried a heavy burden between them and that they staggered as they moved.

They passed out of sight, and breathless and palsied, Hannibal crept about a corner of the tavern. He must be sure!

Presently he heard a distant sound of a splash. It was a splash—a little later the men came up the bank, to disappear in the direction of a tavern. Hannibal peered after them. His very tremors, while they enraptured and tortured him, gave him desperate kind of courage. As the men hid his two men, he started forward, and the guard, who was on the corner, climbed a fence, and a deadening of timber. In the long wet grass he found where a man had dragged their burden. He reached down and swept his hand and foot—once—twice—the third time he found a pale came away red with discovery.

There was the first pale premonition of dawn in the sky, and as he hurried on the light grew, and the dark trunks of trees detached themselves from the white mist that filled the woods and which had made the night so dark. He lighted through the trees to see that he was following the trail.

He left by the following. He emerged on the bank of the Elk river, white with the woods with his ghostly night coat.

The dull beat of the child's heart seemed as he gazed out on the river, as he saw the burning of his life in its dreadful secret. Then the full comprehension of his loss seemed to overwhelm him and he was utterly isolated. Sobs shook him, and he pressed on his knees, holding fast to a stock of his rifle.

"Bob, come back! Can't you come back!" he sobbed miserably. Presently he staggered to his feet. As he glanced about, he saw almost at his feet a log, cut out, made from a single poplar tree.

It was secured to an overhanging branch by a length of a wild grape vine, and he saw that it was across the deadening in the direction of the tavern, he crept down to a water's edge, and entered the river.

In a moment, he had it free from his lashing and the rude craft of his bumping along the bank in spite of the current, with the paddle, and on a favoring current caught it and swept it out toward the center of the river.

To the Editor of the Recorder:—Instead of eight schools being represented in the tournament at Walton there were nine. The writer failed to mention Richmond school last week. From this school one pupil was sent for three studies, and she won two medals over all the graded schools represented. This shows what work the rural schools of today are doing, and that all things done are not always accomplished in what you what you call a graded school. This pupil also received second honor for the third study, this making 13 points for Richmond school. In the rural schools more attention is given to the pupils and there is not so much time wasted as there is in a graded school.

Good old summer time arrived this year on the second day of May. The first day of the month gave evidence of the approach of summer but on the second day there was no mistake about its presence, and teams suffered considerably from the heat while they tread the furrows. The farmers were extremely glad to have to shed their linen and to stop occasionally to let their fagged teams rest.

The farmers of this county are claiming that they have no recollection of spring when there was so little plowing done at this time of the year. The heavy and almost incessant rains have thrown them so behind with their work, that it now looks like a very late crop and possible a short one. Grass, however, is fine. Bad prospect for wheat. Tobacco plants in abundance and growing.—Bracken Review.

Last Saturday night about nine o'clock Hubert White started from Burlington to his home out on the East Bend road, when the young horse attached to his buggy became unruly and began running and kicking. Mr. White stayed in his buggy and when going up the hill south of W. J. Rice's he ran the horse into a ditch. The horse was so excited, throwing the horse, which he succeeded in releasing from the buggy, which is just about the only demolished as possible. Neither the horse nor the driver was hurt.

So far as the plants are concerned Kentucky growers will be able to plant at the tobacco they desire to cultivate this year. The plant beds were sowed later than usual this spring, but owing to the weather that hindered the farmers during the month of April it is well that they were. The plants are coming on rapidly and will be ready to pitch by the time it is possible to prepare the ground for them, and in many instances they will be ready to transplant before the ground is ready to give that work their attention.

Passing through Florence, last Saturday afternoon you did not have to be told that the ladies were busy arranging for a big feast that evening as they could be seen hurrying about in every direction, collecting delicious cakes and many other needful articles for the supper billed for the benefit of the local Baptist church. A large crowd responded to the invitation to attend and a most delightful time was enjoyed, while a considerable sum was realized for the church. Much credit is due the ladies who had charge of the affair.

J. J. WALTON
Commits Suicide By Firing A Thirty-Eight Calibre Bullet Into His Brain.

J. J. Walton, of Bellevue neighborhood, committed suicide last Thursday morning between the hours of 7 and 8 o'clock. He had been quite despondent for several days, and his family, fearing that he might attempt something rash, had been watching him and, among other precautionary measures, had taken his pistol and after discharging it, concealed it, and it is not known where he secured the new pistol with which he took his life.

He was 59 years old and a son Thursday morning and went out into the hall where he took a seat upon a couch and putting the pistol, a 38 calibre, in his right temple fired the ball into his brain. His daughter heard the report of the weapon and ran to the hall where she found her father in a dying condition, but he lived about an hour.

On several occasions before Mr. Walton had been so despondent as to cause his family considerable concern, and the one under which he was laboring at the time he took his life did not appear to be much worse than some of the past.

He was 49 years old and a son of the late John E. Walton, and Missouri McGlasson Walton. His wife is a daughter of Dr. H. A. Williamson, of Bellevue. There are four children.

Mr. Walton had a fine residence occupying a location that commanded a splendid view of the surrounding country for miles in every direction, while the Ohio river from Aurora to Rising Sun, Ind., presented a beautiful scene from his porch. He and his family relations were pleasant and being surrounded by an abundance of this world's goods it is hard to conceive how one mind can reach a condition that will result in such a rash act.

The funeral took place from the residence last Saturday morning, the interment being in the new cemetery at Bellevue.

The funeral services were conducted at the residence by Revs. Edgar Riley and H. B. Hensley, after which the Bellevue Lodge of Odd-Fellows took charge and conducted the interment.

It is very strange how politicians change front on propositions. Not many years ago those who are now frantic in their advocacy of instructions for the Kentucky delegation to the Democratic national convention to be held at Baltimore, were fighting for an uninstructed delegation to the national convention. They claim they do not want any trafficking done at Baltimore. In view of their position in regard to the same question a few years ago it looks like trafficking may have already been done.

Flagged Train With Shirt.
Tearing his shirt from his back an Ohio man flagged a train and saved it from a wreck, but H. T. Alston, Raleigh, N. C., prevented a wreck with Electric Bitters. "I was in a terrible plight when I began to use them," he writes, "my stomach head, back and kidneys were all badly affected and my liver was in bad condition, but four bottles of Electric Bitters made me feel like a new man." A trial will convince you of their matchless merit for any stomach, liver or kidney trouble. Price 25 cents at all drug stores.

BOYS' CORN CLUB.
Work of Cultivation to Be Conducted Along Scientific Lines.

Last week the Recorder announced that Superintendent Edgar C. Riley had received a supply of seed corn to be distributed among the members of the Boone County Boys' Corn Club. This seed is from a superior kind of corn and is supplied by the State Agricultural Department to the end of encouraging the coming generation of the tillers of the soil to make a study of agriculture which has been reduced to a science in which advancements are made year by year. The time has arrived when many of the necessary elements in the soil have to be supplied if the good results are to be obtained, in its cultivation. The work of the Boys' Corn Clubs will be conducted along scientific lines, and the results will be watched with interest by the Kentucky Department of Agriculture as well as by the localities in which the members of these clubs cultivate their corn, and to meet this requirement it is necessary to understand what at one time was called "hook farming." The State Department is encouraging the teaching of agriculture in the schools, and it does not take much thought to understand the necessity of having it taught. It is hoped the boys of Boone county will avail themselves of the opportunity to try their skill this year in the cultivation of corn, and, at least, hold a good position among the boys of the State who engage in the same work. Years ago Boone county was among the best corn producing counties in the State, and there is no reason why it should not return to its old position, if scientific principles, and the requirements of the soil, are observed by the coming farmers.

Porto Rico's New Wonder.

From far away Porto Rico came reports of a wonderful new discovery that is believed will vastly benefit the people. Raymond T. Marchant, of Barceloneta, writes: "Dr. King's New Discovery is doing splendid work here. It cured me about five times of terrible coughs, also my brother of a severe cold in his chest and more than 20 others who used it on my advice. We hope this great medicine will yet be sold in every drug store in Porto Rico." For throat and lung troubles it has no equal. A trial will convince you of its merit. 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free. Guaranteed by all druggists.

Why Hold The Money.

Every time the Burley Society has a law suit they give it as an excuse why they should hold the money of the balance of some year's crop of tobacco. With only seven or eight thousand hogsheads unsold, the society continues to keep a tight hold on about 100,000,000 lbs. of the grade price of 18c to 20c. There seems to be no reason why they should not settle for at least sixty per cent of the 1909 crop and turn over the money held back in the 1907 crop. The people need the money and with tobacco, selling like it has for the past three months we know of no reason why the remainder of the 1909 crop has not been sold and the money turned over to the growers. The longer it is held and the society keeps its officers etc., going, the less Mr. Farmer will have coming to him. Sell and settle up.—Owen County Democrat.

RIDDLED WITH BULLETS

Former Breathitt-County Feudist Leader Fired Upon At Door of His Store.

Jackson, May 4.—Edward Callahan, former sheriff of Breathitt county, at one time a leader of the Hargis faction, was shot and mortally wounded Saturday morning as he stood at the door of his store at Crockettville, in this county, twenty miles from Jackson.

The assassins were hidden on the hillside near the point from which Callahan was shot two years ago. Callahan's body was riddled with bullets.

Callahan was one of the best known men in Breathitt county, and during the days when James Hargis and his faction were in power Callahan was regarded as Hargis' right-hand man. Hargis was county judge and Callahan sheriff at the time when some of the bloodiest records of Breathitt were written.

The Hargis faction, headed by Judge James Hargis and Callahan, were in the ascendancy for many years, but later they lost out, and finally the Deaton faction was reached when Beach Hargis, the son of Judge James Hargis, slew his father and was sent to the penitentiary for life.

During the last few years Callahan had been out of politics, and it was said that he had been avoiding all forms of trouble with his former enemies. He was according to the claims of his friends, attending strictly to his business, but he was always heavily guarded, a frequent arrests were made to take his life.

About two years ago he was fired on from ambush and it was reported at first that he had been killed. Though he was painfully wounded, he recovered, but since then his store had been surrounded by a stockade, and it was said that he never went out without an armed guard at his side.

It is not known who fired the fatal shot.

Callahan was about forty-five years old. He is survived by his wife and several children, one of them being Wilson Callahan, who, several years ago, killed his uncle John Deaton, when the latter attacked Ed. Callahan in Callahan's store and almost cut his arm off with a butcher knife.

Callahan had so many enemies throughout the mountain section that it is hard to suspect from what faction the slayers came. About four years ago a feud broke out between the Deaton and Callahan factions. Callahan was related to the Deatons by marriage, his first wife having been a Miss Deaton. The two factions descended upon Jackson and for some days kept the town in a state of terror.

The Deaton faction took possession of the courthouse while the Callahan's took up their posts of vantage in the Hargis store, just opposite the court house. Here two clans faced each other until citizens at peace with both sides interceded and secured the signatures of John Deaton and Ed. Callahan to a peace pact. Then the two factions rode out of Jackson, taking different roads.

The shooting of Callahan, it is feared, will reopen the old wounds that were inflicted during the existence of the famous Hargis-Cockrill-Cardwell feud, during which men were brutally shot down without money and without being given a chance to fight back.

In quick succession fell Marshal Jim Cockrill, killed from the court house tower, and for which Curt Jett is serving a life sentence; Dr. Cox, the guardian of the Cockrill boys, and U. S. Land Commissioner James Marcum, who was shot down on the threshold of the court house by Curt Jett and Tom White.

The former, who was known as the "Wild Dog," is also serving a life sentence for this crime, having the distinction of serving two. Jett is now the evangelist of the prison at Frankfort, and the town was constantly kept in a state of terror, being filled with soldiers at various times; Jett and the boys being hanged, witnesses assaulted; houses burned and a newspaper office being blown up with dynamite.

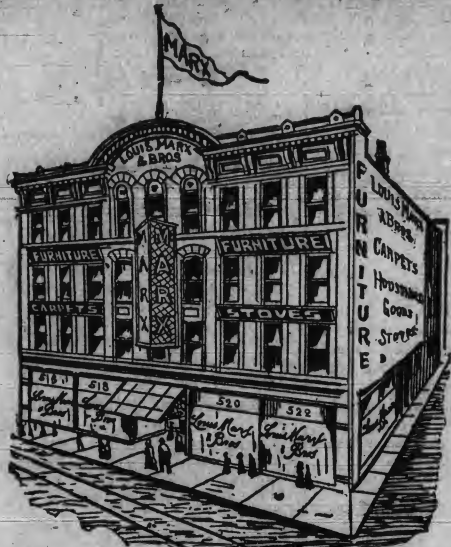

Anticipating the murders were the killing of Ben Hargis and one of the Cockrill boys. The feud had many ramifications and cast its shadow on the heart of the state. Callahan was a marked man. Others of the band of hired murderers were also doomed. John Abner fell. A man named White also gave up his life. Just previous to this, Hargis was shot and killed by his son Beach, now serving life. Callahan announced he was going to take a new life in Lexington. Evidently he forgot it, for shortly after he was shot from ambush, the bullet piercing the body. He survived this wound.

High-Bred Trotting Stallion Walter Winans

—No. 10400—
Trial Record Over Half Mile Track
2:19

Season of 1912, at Jack Eads' farm, the former home of Jeff Roberts, on Lexington-pike, between Bracht Station and Crittenden, Ky. (on Cincinnati Southern R.R.)

Walter Winans' service fee for 1912 will be twelve dollars to insure a living colt. Money due when colt is foaled or mare parted with after breeding.

Walter Winans is a solid chestnut sorrel, is 16 hands high, weighed 1250 lbs. on Covington scales one year ago, and if right fat would weigh 1300; his disposition is perfect. His colts are uniformly good size and color, and the only one of his get that has been raced has race rec. of 2:11.

Walter Winans' breeding is fashionable, and is in a line with the greatest sires in the world, being a half brother to the great Crescent, 2:02 1/2, and the fine breeder, Wilstar, 2:17, whose colts always sold for high prices throughout Indiana and Kentucky.

Walter Winans, sired by Robert McGregory 647; dam Rilee (dam of Kate Ham, 2:28 1/2, etc.) by Hotspur, Jr., 2:02 1/2; grand dam Tugles by Mambrino Gift, 5:24, etc. (see Rilee, Vol. 13), bred by Geo. Ketcham, the owner and breeder of the celebrated Crescent and Wilstar.

Robert McGregory, 647, was sired by Major Edsall, 2:11; dam Nancy Whitman.

Colts by Walter Winans from good mares will be large, and if not great trotters will make fine road horses. Persons living at a distance can secure pasture for their mares.

A. R. MULLINS, Owner, Covington, Ky.

ACE OF TRUMPS, JR.

Ace of Trumps, Jr. is a beautiful bay, heavy made and tall, two white feet, snip in forehead, 16 hands high, weighs 1,475 pounds. He is a great stock horse and grand breeder. Ace of Trumps, Jr. is by Carlton A. 888; he by Nonstop, 1860; he by G. Robinson, 1878; dam, Queen of Trumps, 896; she by Ace of Trumps, 17, by S. Noble 1659, by G. G. Blackleg 146.

CHARLES MUNTZ,

There never was a time when people appreciated the real merit of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy more than now. This is shown by the increase in sales and voluntary testimonials below. Persons who have been cured by it. If you or your children are troubled with a cough or cold give it a trial and become acquainted with its good qualities. For sale by J. V. Berkshire & Son and B. R. Also the black, MIKE, will stand at the same place on the same terms, $10.00.

Care will be taken to prevent accidents, but will not be responsible should any occur. For further particulars apply to

XEN SCOTT, Owner.

The Imported German Coach Horse, Plutarch, 3183.

I will give a return season for the best colt, the 1911 get of this stallion, regardless of sex, to be shown at the Boone County Harvest Home this fall.

The Fine Black Jack, LANKY BOB,

Will make the season at my stable at $5.00 to insure a colt to stand up and suck.

LANKY BOB is three years old, 15-8 hands high and a splendid individual.

In handling the above stock care will be taken to prevent accidents, but I will not be responsible should any occur.

Parties breeding to either of these animals must follow up the season. No business done on Sunday. Write for pedigree and particulars.

T. E. RANDALL, R. D. No. 1, Burlington, Ky.

JOHN B.

The fine Spanish jack will make the season of 1912 at Berger fair grounds, and will be permitted to serve mares at $10 to insure a living colt. For further information address A. F. CONNER or J. G. RENAKER, Florence, Kentucky.

The Fine High Bred Percheron Stallion,

PRINCE OLSEN

Will make the season of 1912 at my farm two miles west of Walton, Boone County, Ky., at $10.00 to insure a living colt. Persons parting with mares forfeit the insurance money. A colt retained on colt until season money is paid.

PRINCE OLSEN was foaled in 1907, and is one model of his class. He weighs 1520 pounds and is nearly 17 hands in height. He is a beautiful black, and is a picture of symmetry and fine points of the draft horse. His breeding qualities are excellent.

PRINCE OLSEN was sired by Blackmon, a registered Percheron stallion owned by Ole G. Olsen, of Shabbona Grove, Illinois, where he was foaled in 1907, and from whom he was purchased by me last spring, selecting this horse over many others because of his excellent qualities. Prince Olsen is eligible to registry, and is one of the highest bred draft horses ever in this section of the country. The dam of Prince Olsen was a high bred registered Percheron mare. I feel that farmers and breeders will make no mistake in breeding to Prince Olsen, as it means a good, strong colt that will meet every requirement on the farm. One of the lacking features of our horses is the size and strength. With the well bred Percheron like Prince Olsen these essentials are fully incorporated.

Come and see the horse and inspect his good points and you will be bred to him.

Also at the same place and under the same conditions I will offer for public service my fine breeding jack.

BEN

Is a black Jack with neatly points, six years old, 15 1/2 hands high, large bone and big body, very long ear and has proven himself to be one of the best breeders in Kentucky. His mules are quick sellers and several have been sold at $120 at weaning time. His service fee will be $10.

Care will be taken to prevent accidents but I will not be responsible should any occur.

JOSEPH READNOUR, Walton, Ky.

The High Class Saddle and Harness Stallion, BELL'S FITZSIMMONS,

2844 A. S. B. A.

Will make the season of 1912 at the W. L. Norman Stock Farm at Walton, Ky., and if you want a show horse breed to him.

BELL FITZSIMMONS is a dark bay, 16 hands, weighs 1200 pounds, with three white feet, snip C. G. Harris, and lots of style and action. He was sired by

BRACKEN CHIEF 2148, by Harrison Chief 1906 by Clark Chief (69); dam Kit Hardy (2930) by Indian Chief (1718); 1st dam Miss Berry 4034, by Roderick 104; by Mambrino Le Grande (90); 2d dam, by Well's Yellow Jacket 112; 3d dam by Gray Eagle.

Miss Berry is also the dam of Woodland Chief, one of the finest show horses in Kentucky. Woodland Chief is a full brother to Bell's Fitzsimmons and a full brother to Rhoderick, and one of the finest geldings ever showed, and sold to a party in Texas for $1,000.

BELL'S FITZSIMMONS is also the sire of the champion walk-trot gelding, Mat Coyne, showed at the Horse Shows in the fall of 1909 and sold for $8,000, and also the champion harness mare shown by C. G. Harris, one of the largest dealers in the State, says some of the highest class horses he has handled have been by Bell's Fitzsimmons.

The greatest show, harness and saddle horses of our state have sprung from the loins of Harrison Chief and Indian Chief. Where can you find a horse of better breeding than Bell's Fitzsimmons? He has been a winning show horse ever since a suckling colt, and has proven himself a successful sire. Some of the highest priced saddle, harness and walk-trot horses the State has ever seen have been sired by him.

Personal care over all stock. Mares left on good pasture at 10c a day at owner's risk.

$15.00 to insure a mare. In foal the money due when the fact is ascertained or the mare is parted with.

JOHN KENSLEB, C. R. BENSLEY, Walton, Ky.

Also prepared to breed colts and handle Saddle and Harness horses.

A few drops of cologne or toilet vinegar in the wash water is most refreshing and stimulating to the skin.

Don DeGozee

The Belgian Draft Horse, foaled in 1906, will make the present season at E. J. Aylor's stable one and one-half miles from Hebron, Boone County, Ky., at $10.00 to insure a colt to stand up and suck, money due when colt comes or the mare is parted with or leaves the county.

Don DeGozee, despite his great size and weight is well balanced throughout, perfectly proportioned and symmetrically built. He has as light action as a stallion of much smaller type, and his disposition is much better than is usually found in horses of his blood strains. He is a beautiful dark sorrel, 17 hands high, weighs 1,700 pounds, has a broad, flat foot, heavy bone, fine style and action. This great breed of draft horses is especially known for better action than any other draft horse for heavy, good bone and good hoofs, and gentle kind workers.

Don DeGozee's dam Della Wire, brown mare, the great draft show mare of Campbell County, Kentucky sired by Bayard DeGozee No. 2168, whose Belgian Stud Book number is 21670, bred by Mr. Baillieux E. of Gozee, sired by Morton (312), he by Brilliant (709), out of Conite (703), dam Catherine DeGozee (1885), she by Lion (706), out of Marie (312).

Great care will be taken to prevent accidents but we will not be responsible should any occur.

E. J. AYLOR & SON.

Harrison Prince

will make the present season at the stable of G. T. Gaines, one mile from Burlington on the Petersburg pike at $20 to insure a living colt.

HARRISON PRINCE is a chestnut stallion, 16 hands high, 4 years old, has a large blaze face, two white feet, and is the perfect type of a saddle horse with fine finish and action, a champion in his class from a colt.

Harrison Prince comes from a family of show horses on both sides, as it means a show horse himself, and should sire show horses. His sire is Dandy Jim, 2d, 1531, the well known show horse by McChieff, 1551, by Rex McDonald, 888, by Rex Denmark, 840, he by Crigger's Denmark by Old Denmark Chief.

His dam, Mary Neal, 1905, also a show mare, by Boyd Wilks, by Favorite Wilks; 2d dam, Skiddies, by Washington Denmark, Jr., by Washington Denmark 64.

Care will be taken to prevent accidents, but I will not be responsible should any occur.

In 1913 a premium of $20 will be given for the best colt of this year's get of Harrison Chief.

HIGH VINE, No. 2733.

By Highland Gaines 1677.

Grand sire, Highland Denham, 730 Dam, Beale's Sable, 2882, by Shropshire Kentucky Squirrel, 1365; 2nd dam, Ida May by Fayette Denmark, 601; 3d dam, Maxey by Granger; 4th dam, Ma by Export, 77.

HIGH VINE is a five getted Saddle Stallion, eight years old, 16 hands high, and weighs 1800 lbs., is a rich golden chestnut in color, and a perfect model in conformation.

HIGH VINE is a uniform breeder and reproduces his own kind. The show record of his colts is unequalled by the colts of their farm. Take look at the record of his colts.

His colts have been shown at various fairs and have never been defeated in their class, and in addition have won the highest admiration everywhere.

In several instances the owners of High Vine colts have been offered $200 for the colts at weaning time, and this handsome price was refused by the owners as all of them believed the colts to promise much better as they developed. There must be something in the breeding when $200 offers for weanling colts are rejected by owners who are governed by business principles in the sale of the products of their farm. Take look at the record of High Vine's colts and you will see the style and attractive qualities that make the price in a sale.

HIGH VINE will make the season at the stable of W. Lee Gaines on Lexington pike, midway between Walton and Richmond, Boone County, Ky., at $20.00 to insure a live foal; season money due if mare is parted with. No responsibility for accidents. Make engagements ahead of his services are limited, and it save annoying delays.

For the accommodation of those from a distance Mr. Gaines will pasture a few mares at $2.50 per month, which he will take for their care.

PRIMUM: Free season for 1913 will be given the owner of the best High Vine colt exhibited at the Florence fair at the High Vine colt show.

HOW OLD PEOPLE

May Prolong Their Lives

At an advanced age waste is more rapid than repair. The organs act more slowly and less effectively than in youth. The circulation is poor, the blood thin and watery, the appetite poor and digestion weak.

We want to say to every aged person in this vicinity that Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron tonic (without oil) will prolong life. It creates an appetite, aids digestion and makes good blood. In this manner Vinol rebuilds waste and replaces weakness with strength, giving new life to the worn system.

If people in this vicinity only realized how Vinol invigorates old people we would not be able to supply the demand.

Try a bottle of Vinol with the understanding that your money will be returned if it does not help you. Robt. W. Jones, Druggist, Walton, Ky.

Harry W. Carver was elected president and Benj. W. Records, secretary and treasurer. The stockholders will meet again May 16th and elect a board of directors.

Everett York, our clever tonorial artist, was considerably bruised Sunday by being thrown out of a buggy in which he was riding, the horse pulling the buggy becoming frightened at an automobile and running into a wire fence. The buggy was considerably damaged and Mr. York was hurled over the fence with the collision with painful but not serious results.

Dr. A. N. Jones, physician for the L. & N. Railroad Company was called to Zion Station, Monday morning to attend Sam Rex, the section foreman at that place, who was painfully injured by a handcar on which he and a fellow-workman were riding, jumping the track and throwing both men with great violence on a pile of cinders. Both men were crippled and bruised to a very painful extent, but no serious results are anticipated.

O. D. Courtney and J. W. McGraw of Georgetown, were here last Friday looking over this territory with a view to establishing a loose leaf tobacco warehouse at Walton, and were very favorably impressed with the advantages of this point in supplying facilities, source of tobacco supply, closeness to Cincinnati and low rate of taxation. Walton Masonic Lodge conferred the Master Mason's degree last Friday night on J. G. Tomlin, Edward M. Johnson and John Ingram, being in session until midnight, the work being very complete and exemplified by stereoscopic views, accompanying a beautiful lecture by the Worshipful Master, John L. Vest.

There was a good sized attendance and at the close of the work the brethren were invited to the opera house where the sisters of the Eastern Star had a fine luncheon spread in an appetizing manner, and after a full enjoyment of these good things, cigars were passed, and after a quiet smoke and the pleasure of pleasant conversation for an hour the "good night" was said and the happy gathering dispersed to their respective homes.

Samuel Byland of near Richwood, spent Friday here with friends and on business relative to the affairs of the defunct Richmond Bank of which the Equitable Bank is the assignee.

The depositors have been paid twenty-five per cent of their deposits and the other twenty-five per cent will probably be paid by the first of next month, as through the management of the assignee, and chiefly Jno. L. Vest, who is the Vice president of the Equitable Bank, and who handled the Richmond Bank matter, the depositors have been made of what was considered valueless paper, and the depositors will be paid in full without any assessment on the stockholders. If the business had been closed up hurriedly and with no diplomatic intervention the assets of the Richmond Deposit Bank would not have paid fifty per cent on the deposits after the expenses had been paid. There is some litigation pending, made necessary by the protection of the assignee, but when this is settled the entire matter will be disposed of in a way that the affairs of the defunct bank will be definitely settled, and should there be any remaining assets the stockholders will get their distributive part, but from the present indications the stockholders will lose all of their holdings in the fifteen thousand dollars capital paid in, and it appears that they are lucky to get off that easy.

CHAPTER VII.

On the River.

Betty stood under a dripping umbrella in the midst of a downpour. Just arrived by the four-hour coach that plied regularly between Washington and Georgetown, she had found the long board platform beside the canal crowded with her fellow passengers. Suddenly she became aware of a tall, familiar figure moving through the crowd. It was Bruce Carrington. At the same moment he saw her, and with a casual air that quite deceived her, approached.

"You're leaving tonight?" he asked.

"Yes—aren't it miserable the way it rains? And why are they so slow—why don't they hurry with that boat?"

"It's in the last lock now," explained Carrington, and gathering up Betty's hand luggage, he helped her aboard.

By the time they had reached Wheeling, Betty had quite parted with whatever superficial prejudice she might have had concerning river-men. This particular one was evidently a very nice river-man, an exception to his kind. He made choice of the steamer on which she should continue her journey, and thoughtfully chose The Nalad—a slow boat.

"I haven't a thing to offer her—this is plain madness of mine," he kept telling himself, and then the expression of his face would become grim and determined. No more of the river for him—he'd get hold of some land and go to raising cotton; that was the way money was made.

Slow as The Nalad was, the days passed much too swiftly for him. When Memphis was reached their friendly intercourse would come to an end. There would be her brother, of whom she had occasionally spoken—he would be pretty certain to have the ideas of his class.

The days, like any other days, dwindled. The end of it all was close at hand. Another twenty-four hours, and Carrington reflected there would only be good-by to say.

"We will reach New Madrid to-night," he told her. They were watching the river, under a flood of yellow moonlight.

Carrington, with his back against a stanchion, watched her discontentedly.

"You'll be mighty glad to have this over with, Miss Malroy," he said at length, with a comprehensive sweep toward the river.

"Yes—shan't you?" and she opened her eyes questioningly.

"No," said Carrington with a short laugh, drawing a chair near hers and sitting down.

Betty, in surprise, gave him a quick look, and then as quickly glanced away from what she encountered in his eyes. As she looked, suddenly pale points of light appeared on a distant headland.

"Is that New Madrid—Oh, is it, Mr. Carrington?" she cried eagerly.

"I reckon so," but he did not alter his position.

"But you're not looking!"

"Yes, I am—I'm looking at you. I reckon you'll think me crazy, Miss Malroy—presumptuous and all that—but I wish Memphis could be wiped off the map, and that we could go on like this for ever!"

"You mustn't talk so—I am nothing to you—"

"Yes, you are. You're everything to me," said Carrington doggedly.

"You shall love me." She was powerless in his embrace. She drew her breath on her cheek, then he kissed her. Suddenly his arms fell at his side; his face was white. "I was a brute to do that—Betty, forgive me! I am sorry—no, I can't be sorry!"

They were alongside the New Madrid wharf now, and a certain young man who had been impatiently watching The Nalad's lights ever since they became visible crossed the gang-plank with a bound.

"Betty—why in the name of goodness did you ever choose this tub?" said the new-comer.

"Charley!"

Carrington stepped back. This must be the brother who had come over the river from Memphis to meet her—but her brother's name was Tom! He looked this stranger—this Charley—over with a hostile eye, offended by his good looks, his confident manner, in which he thought he detected an air of ownership, as if certainly he was holding her hands longer than was necessary. An instant later, when Betty, remembering, turned to speak to him, his place by the rail was deserted.

"I wonder if you could be induced to make a temporary loan of that fifty cents? The sum involved is really such a trifling trifle. I don't need to point out to you the absolute moral certainty of my returning it at an early date."

It was not the loss of his money that Hannibal most feared, and the coin passed from his possession into his host's custody.

"Thank you, my boy! I must step down to the tavern—when I return, please God, we shall know more of each other." While he was still speaking, he had produced a jug from behind the quilt that screened his bed, and now took himself off into the night.

Left alone, Hannibal gravely seated himself at the table. What the judge's tarder lacked in variety it more than made up for in quantity, and the boy was grateful for this fact. Presently he heard the judge's heavy, shuffling step as he came up the path from the road, and a moment later his gross bulk of body filled the doorway. Breathing hard and perspiring, the judge entered the shanty, but his eagerness kept him silent until he had established himself in his chair beside the table, with the jug and a cracked glass at his elbow. Then, bland and smiling, he turned toward his guest.

"My tenderest regards, Hannibal!" and he nodded over the rim of the cracked glass his shaking hand had carried to his lips. Twice the glass was filled and emptied, and then again, his roving, watery eyes rested meditatively on the child. "Have you a father?" he asked suddenly. Hannibal shook his head. "A mother?"

"They both of them done died years and years ago," answered the boy. "I can't tell you how long back it was, but I reckon I don't know much about it. I must have been a small child."

"Ho—a small child!" cried the judge, laughing. He cocked his head on one side and surveyed Hannibal Wayne Hazard with a glance of comic seriousness. "In God's name what do you call yourself now?"

"In most ten," said Hannibal, with dignity.

"I can well believe it," responded the judge. "Where did you come from?"

"From across the mountains."

"And where are you going?"

"To west Tennessee."

"Have you any friends there?"

"Yes, sir."

"You've money enough to see you through?" and what the judge intended for a smile of fatherly affection became a leer of infinite cunning. "I got ten dollars."

"Ten dollars—!" the judge smacked his lips once. "Ten dollars—" he repeated, and smacked his lips twice. The purple flush on the judge's face, where the dignity that belonged to age had gone down in wreck, deepened.

He quitted his chair and, lurching somewhat as he did so, began to pace the floor.

"Take me for your example, boy! You may be poor, you may possibly be hungry—you'll often be thirsty, but through it all you will remain that splendid thing—a gentleman! Perhaps you'll contend that the old order is overthrown, that family has gone to the devil? You are right, and there's the pity of it! The social fabric is tottering—I can see it totter—and he tottered himself as he said this.

"Well, I'm an old man—the spectacle won't long offend me. I'll die presently." He was so profoundly moved by the thought that he could not go on. His voice broke, and he buried his face in his arms. A sympathetic moisture had gathered in the child's eyes. He slipped from his chair and stole to the judge's side.

"I'm mighty sorry you're going to die."

"Bless you, Hannibal!" cried the judge, looking wonderfully cheerful, despite his recent bitterness of spirit. "I'm not experiencing any of the pangs of mortality now. My dissolution ain't a matter of tonight or tomorrow—there's some life in Slossum Price yet, for all the rough usage, eh? I think you'd better go to bed."

"I reckon I had," agreed Hannibal, slipping from his chair.

"Well, take my bed back of the quilt. You'll find a hoe there. You can dig up the dirt under the shuck tick with it—which helps astonishingly. What would the world say if it could know that Judge Slossum Price makes his bed with a hoe?"

Hannibal retired behind the quilt. "I don't find it comfortable!" the judge asked, when the rustling of the shuck tick informed him that the child had lain down.

"Yes, sir," said the boy.

"Have you said your prayers?" inquired the judge.

"No, sir. I ain't said 'em yet."

GOVERNOR McCREARY

For Champ Clark and Harmony— Why There's No Reason For Row Over Instructions.

"To the Democrats of Kentucky—I regret that there is discord among Democrats in Kentucky. Censure and recrimination have been so prevalent that I regret also that misrepresentations, insinuations and lies have been spoken or published about me, but I shall not indulge in the same line of abuse or vituperation. I am not in favor of a 'rule or ruin' policy. The Democratic party has already been injured by such methods, and I will not be a party to further contention or injury. The success of the Democratic party should be paramount to the success of any individual."

"I have not assailed or criticized any person, and I have done nothing to justify the assaults made upon me. I am the same Democrat who, last November, thanked the Democracy of Kentucky for electing me as Governor by the exceptionally large majority of 18,000, and I have never written nor spoken harsh words about any Democrat since that time, but I have by continued zeal and untiring methods tried to show my gratitude by upholding an administration creditable to our State and by devoting myself to the good work of redeeming the State on the Democratic platform, and nearly every pledge has been redeemed."

"I have confidence in the justice and intelligence of the Democrats of Kentucky and I am sure they will always do what they believe to be right and encourage and sustain those who work for the public good."

"In my whole public life I have never intentionally deceived my brother Democrats, and I have for forty years devoted whatever of intellect or energy I possessed to the good of the people and to the advancement of the best interests of the Commonwealth. Even the Republicans in my last race for Governor, after diligent search, could find nothing in my record to criticize or condemn in my public life, which is somewhat lengthy. I have never belonged to a 'ring' or to a 'political machine,' but on the contrary I have always opposed them."

"When the Democrats of Kentucky demanded my services last year I responded to the call made by active leading Democrats in four-fifths of the counties of the State, though I did not desire to be a candidate for Governor again, and I made the most laborious and lengthy canvass ever made by me in my life. I am glad now that I made the race and helped to redeem Kentucky from the grasp of the Republicans, and to change the 18,000 Republican majority given four years ago into 31,000 Democratic majority last November."

"I was also on the side of the people. Out of twenty-one candidates for State offices I was the only one who made a speech before the Democratic Executive Committee advisory to the State election; and after the primary election I made a speech before the State Democratic Committee advising a convention to adopt a platform. I helped to prepare that platform, which contained ten resolutions which I had already advocated in my race for the Democratic nomination for Governor; and I believe no better or more progressive platform was ever adopted by a State convention."

"My support of this platform, which the great mass of the people wanted, led to assaults upon me by certain persons who have never refrained, or hesitated to assail me since the State convention was held. I was elected however, by a large majority, without their aid, and I hope to conduct an honest, economical and patriotic administration, and I do not have their support and endorsement."

"The first time after my election as Governor that I had an opportunity to reaffirm the Democratic platform was when I delivered my inaugural address. I then reaffirmed my allegiance to the platform in full and complete terms, and when the General Assembly met I sent a message to the Senators and Representatives in which I discussed and recommended every plank in the Democratic platform. During the session I made every proper effort to have the platform pledges enacted into law, and the members of the General Assembly, of whom I can with pleasure say that no more efficient or more intelligent or patriotic Senators and Representatives ever assembled at the Capitol in Kentucky, took hold of the measures contained in the platform and enacted them into law, and I approved them as fast as they were passed by the General Assembly."

"I refer to these matters now because I desire that Democrats who have honored me so often shall know how I have complied with my promises, and what my views are with regard to matters which now confront us. Those persons who are now talking so much about their fights for Democracy, or of their efforts to free Democrats from the clutches of rings, should remember that the great mass of the Democrats of Kentucky have already shown by their ability, independence and courage, that they can do their duty when their efforts are needed, and take care of themselves in a crisis; and they will do it again when necessary."

"My highest and sincerest aspirations are for harmony and union and victory in our party. Every proper effort should be made to preserve the unity and good feeling which existed among Democrats at last November election, and factional fights for candidates for the presidential nomination should be avoided, as far as possible. Democrats who have been excited and embittered should call a halt and beware, lest they dissatisfy and drive away that large, conservative element which returned to the Democratic party last November. It is time for wisdom, conciliation, conservatism and good feeling in the Democratic party in Kentucky."

"Last January, in a speech made by me in Frankfort, I advocated that no instructions be given for any Democratic candidate for President at our State convention. Several States have already held conventions without instructing their delegates. Notably among them is the State of New York. The Massachusetts convention instructed for Gov. Foss for President, and Connecticut instructed for Gov. Baldwin; Kentucky sent an undivided delegation to the Grover Cleveland was nominated. There was no trading or trafficking then, but we nominated a Democratic candidate for President who was elected. I remember correctly; there was no instruction by the Kentucky Democratic convention for a candidate for President when Parker was nominated by the National Democratic Convention, and further back in the past there were other State conventions held in Kentucky, where no instructions were given in favor of the nomination of any particular Democratic candidate for President."

"In that speech I made last January I advocated 'no instructions' in order to avoid the dissension, division and discord since aroused in our State. I believed that if we do not instruct, we do not have to vote for a Republican, and that Democrats would be better satisfied if they were left free to select a candidate who would be sure to be victorious. "Every congressional district has the right to select two delegates to the Baltimore convention, and when the various counties making up these congressional districts hold their meetings before the State convention assemblies, the delegates to the State convention will know who the proposed delegates to the National convention are for, and if the county delegates desire to instruct the district delegates, they can, of course, do so. The State convention only selects four delegates to represent the State at large, and I can see no good reason for the proposed contention that have been aroused on account of instructions or no instructions for the delegates to the National convention."

"If the Democrats of the State convention, decide to instruct the State delegates, and if the district delegates instruct their delegates, I will, as I have always done, faithfully submit to the will of the majority. I will support, as I have always done, the nominees of the National Democratic Convention to be held in Baltimore for President and Vice President, and I will uphold whatever action is taken by the Kentucky Democratic Convention and support any candidate for President for whom instructions may be given."

"It is proper I should say in this connection that I am for the Champ Clark for the Democratic nomination for President, and I told my intimate friends when he first became a candidate that I would support him, and he has known since his first visit to Kentucky that I would do all in my power to give him the nomination. My long service with Clark in his long public life, his statesmanship, ability, Democracy and knowledge of national questions, and the fact that he was born and reared in Kentucky, and that his wife, his cousin, all contributed to my desire that he be nominated, and I believed that with or without instructions he would get the delegates vote of Kentucky, and it was my hope, if he became the nominee for President, that he would carry Kentucky at the next November election on the same or greater majority than he gave us last November, and I believed the way to accomplish this result was to avoid all division, dissension and discord which might be engendered by the discussion of instructions."

"As an explanation or cause for the unnecessary bitterness and vituperation which have been injected into the campaign in Kentucky, it is now frequently alleged that it is a fight by persons hostile to the administration to gain control of the Democratic organization or party machinery in the State, so as to place the men who have been most prominent in charge of the administration in the party, and make them leaders in the management of the Democratic party. It is also alleged that as soon as they get control of the organization and of the party in the State plans will be laid to repeal, when the next Legislature meets, the important and popular enactments of the last session and it has been alleged that men who opposed me when I was a candidate for Governor and men who opposed in every way in their power the legislative enactments of last winter, are now quite vociferous and bitter and constant in their opposition to the present administration."

"There is no good reason for setting aside or condemning the present administration, and by the action of the Legislature, I mean the State officers who were elected last November."

"Those who assume to be leaders should be careful. The voters are the sovereigns. The State officers were elected by the voters, and I do not believe that the voters are in favor of justice and fairness will set aside or condemn officers who have been faithful and efficient, and who have complied with every pledge and redeemed the State from Republican rule."

"The outlook for Democratic victory at the next presidential election is better than it has been in many years. Democrats are generally, in the United States, harmonious, and united, and sincerely hope that the Democrats of Kentucky will peacefully and harmoniously take such action as will be beneficial to our party and aid in doing Kentucky's part in achieving a great national victory."

"Republicans appear to be hopelessly divided; the leading candidates for president and nomination are criticizing and condemning the bad record of the other. Their followers are embittered, and are making a terrible blunder by the Democratic party will deprive it of an overwhelming victory next November."

"Democrats should get together. There is no cause whatever for controversy, contention, criticism or bitterness. Let us adjust all matters that have produced discord as harmoniously as possible then go forward to help nominate the Democratic candidate who can be elected."

"I said at the Democratic harmony banquet in Louisville, more than a month ago, that if Champ Clark was nominated he could defeat Taft, and I also believed he could defeat Roosevelt."

"My brother Democrats of Kentucky should send faithful, true and tried Democrats to the national convention to be held at Baltimore, and our watchwords should be: 'Harmony and Victory.'"

Edison, the wizard, claims to have invented a process which will revolutionize the mining business. It separates the paying elements of ores at almost a nominal cost, about one-fifth of what it costs at present.

Fred Warren Eggleston is now editor and publisher of the Rising Sun Recorder which was so long published by his grandfather, the late F. J. Waldo. The new editor enters upon his work as a veteran. He says his paper will be progressive Republican.

Cincinnati is certainly a good field for the operation of a force of bank examiners who will examine. Too many banking institutions going to the wall there from cases which examiners ought to detect in time to prevent the crashes which are becoming frequent in that city.

In his speech at Boston last week Mr. Taft intimated that after all Roosevelt is "not necessary to the life of a nation." It will occur to a great many people that the man who is important enough to select his successor as President of the U. S. is not to be sneered at—just because he is now trying to name a successor to his successor.—Commoner.

Mr. Bryan's touring of one State in the interest of Speaker Clark and another in the interest of Woodrow Wilson has an element of insincerity in it that has caused many to believe that he is really working in the interest of Hon. W. J. Bryan, of Nebraska, who hopes to be nominated by the Baltimore convention, and whose boom will be sprung in due time.

The year 1912 will be long remembered for two political dramas: A President and an ex-President making a hot campaign for the presidential nomination by his party, each declaring how little the other is to be relied on as the highest official in the land, and each producing official documents in support of their charges, while in the other party a three-times nominee for the presidency is making speeches in some states in favor of one candidate and in other States in favor of another. Truly these be progressive times.

The trouble in Kentucky with quite a number of the leaders in each of the political parties is they are so well acquainted with the methods of each other they know they are not to be trusted, and when they are not rooting for the same man trouble and vituperation is the offspring of their political acquaintance. The rank and file of the Democratic party is in no wise responsible for the conditions that are developing in Kentucky. It is all due to a few disgruntled politicians massed behind a man who is fast approaching the conclusion that Kentucky belongs to him politically.

Woodrow Wilson is the same Woodrow Wilson today that he was a few months ago when Henry Watterson was for him for the Democratic nomination for the presidency, but Mr. Watterson is now telling the voters some very ugly things about him. Of course Mr. Watterson was as well acquainted with Mr. Wilson then as he is now, but some how or other he was, not long since, willing to have Mr. Wilson nominated notwithstanding his multitude of bad political traits. Why did Mr. Watterson not have the interest of the Democratic party as Mr. Watterson then as he pretends to have now?

The recently enacted law prohibiting the common drinking cup in Kentucky, forbids the use of the common drinking cups on trains, railroad stations, hotels, boarding houses, stores, steamboats, restaurants or other public, frequented places. No person or corporation in charge of such places shall permit the use of the drinking cup in common, and warning placards must be posted in conspicuous positions. A violation of the provision of this act is punishable by a fine of not less than $1 and not more than $10, and each day's violation of any of the provisions of the act is to be considered a separate offense.

Elsewhere in the Recorder appears an article written by Gov. McCreary and addressed to the Democrats of Kentucky. The article is the result of the numerous attacks made upon the Governor by some of the political cut-throats with which the party is infested in Kentucky, and who always make trouble at the time the rank and file of the party would be harmonious in its action were it not for these same rule-or-ruin persons to whom party supremacy is undesirable unless they are permitted to name the conditions under which it is obtained and the persons to be put in charge. Their heavy blows are most invariably struck in opposition to a united action on the part of the party. Yet with a thorough knowledge of these men's political history, Gov. McCreary's article is consoling in its tone, he having the faculty of expressing his opinion in regard to political affairs without vilifying anyone, although some would have applauded an article of that character, while it would have been extremely gratifying to the political scabs had he descended to their level to indulge in a trade of personal abuse, but the grand old man always maintains a becoming dignity under all circumstances.

ARE THEY AFRAID?

There are, in this neighborhood agents for several "bucket bowl" cream separators. "Bucket bowl" separators are the kind with wide mouth bowls, full of parts, set on top of their spindles. These agents say to the farmer intending to buy a separator: "Look out for the Tubular, or 'Don't try the Tubular, or 'Beware of the Tubular.' To hear them talk you would guess right away that is the best cream separator made, and that these "bucket bowl" fellows are afraid of it. And they are afraid of it. The Tubular surpasses every other separator in every particular, and you should take mighty good care you do see a Tubular before you buy a separator. We will be pleased to show you the latest Tubular and give you an illustrated catalog.

Observe the plumb bob on rear of the Tubular frame. It makes leveling quick, easy, accurate—enables you to keep the Tubular level and get the best work out of it.

Covington merchants have large stocks of all kinds of merchandise which they are selling at prices that will demand the attention of shoppers if they can be induced to inspect them. It will require a considerable sum of money to restore the Burlington and Bellevue pike to a decent condition. The ditching the entire length need opening and to put the road bed in proper shape will require hundreds of perches of rock.

The farmers never labored under more disadvantages than they have this spring. Instead of corn planting being in full blast as it should be a very small proportion of the ground intended for corn has been broken, and the rain continues to descend at frequent intervals.

The local High School is making arrangements for the commencement exercises on the night of June 4th. It will be an event in which the people of Burlington and vicinity should take great interest and see that it is made a perfect success, in every particular.

Did The Proper Thing.

The county board of education has employed Prof. Dix for three years longer as principal of the county High School at Burlington. Prof. Dix has done good work here and the board is to be congratulated on having secured his services for a term of three years. Besides being good teachers Mr. and Mrs. Dix are very desirable citizens.

An Important Lawsuit.

The suit of Pate and Keeney against Josie Platt and others was to have been called yesterday for trial in the Ohio county circuit court in session in Rising Sun. Pate and Keeney claim that the ferry, the owners of the wharf at Rising Sun and therefore the ferry has no right to land on their property. It does appear that the suit is not in the interest of Rising Sun.

Base Ball.

The Walton High School base ball team came over last Saturday afternoon and played the Burlington High School team, the score being 6 to 4 in favor of Burlington. Dix was in the box for Burlington and held the visitors to six hits, two of them being made in the ninth inning when Walton made their try runs. Hager was on to his job behind the bat while the infield and the outfield each gave Dix three support. Dix struck out nine men. Craig pitched a nice game for Walton but was not given good support. He held Burlington to nine hits and struck out eight men. The grounds were wet and the ball heavy.

A Protracted Swim.

A horse belonging to James Burns, who lives on Woolper creek at the mouth of Ashby Fork, was grazing up the latter creek about a mile from home one day last week. Ashby was on the rampage and the storm was still raging, when a keen clap of thunder so frightened the horse that he jumped into the rushing stream. The animal began swimming but the current was so swift it could not get to the shore. It swam down to Woolper creek where the larger volume of water turned it towards the Ohio river, and it was going at a rapid rate when, after swimming half a mile, it landed safe on the bank where it remained very contentedly until the water receded sufficiently for it to cross the creek and return home, none the worse because of its long swim.

Vein Getting Richer.

J. P. Dillon arrived here yesterday from Phoenix, and in company with A. W. Davis, secretary, and W. W. Lewis, mining engineer, visited the property of the Fortune Mining Company. The object of the visit was to inspect the strike of rich ore made yesterday.

The party returned more enthusiastic than ever over the great possibilities of the proposition. Mr. Dillon says that the new ore is the best yet found in the property and that twenty inches of the vein will stand shipping. The new ore shoot was cut in the drift tunnel at the 260-foot point which is at a depth of about 110 feet on the dip of the vein. The tunnel will be carried ahead to determine the length of the ore shoot. The principal values in the ore are gold and silver and according to Engineer Lewis the property faces a bright future. A number of Prescott people are interested in the enterprise and all are jubilant over the promising outlook for the early success of the venture. This property being so favorably located right alongside the railroad track, will enable the Fortune to ship its ores at a minimum of cost as well as to handle at a good profit ores of a lower grade than if their property were not so favorably situated. Resolutions of Respect.

Alline, Lodge No. 19, I. O. O. F.
Inasmuch as the Divine Father of the Universe saw fit in his infinite wisdom on May 1st, 1912, to call from our Subordinate lodge here, to wit, the Grand Lodge above, our beloved brother, John J. Walton; therefore be it Resolved, That in the death of Bro. Walton Alline Lodge has lost one of its truest and best members, an exemplary Odd-Fellow and our great order one of its useful members.
Resolved, That in the death of Bro. Walton the family sustained the loss of a kind and devoted husband and father, the community one of its most useful and respected citizens.
Resolved, That we tender his family our heartfelt sympathy in this irreparable loss.
Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon our minute book, a copy sent to the bereaved family and one to the Boone County Recorder for publication.

Committee-Edwin Kelly, E. H. Clore, Robt. W. Rice.

The Recorder is in receipt of a copy of the Industrial Edition of the Ashland Clipper, published at Ashland, the county seat of Clark county, Kansas. It is an extensive write-up of Clark county. Among the halftones of the county officers is that of W. A. Williamson, of Bellevue, this county. He is sheriff of the county, to which office he was first elected in 1908 and reelected in 1910. He is a fine looking man and is making a good sheriff. The picture of B. L. Stephens' residence and immediate premises. He owns a large ranch and from the number of mounted westerners in the picture he must be in command of a battalion of cow boys. Mr. Stephens was one of the early settlers in Clark county, who had the nerve to brave the hardships that overtook them and is now enjoying the rich fruits that the hard knocks he suffered along about 1885.

Mrs. R. Brant, 1115 St. Parkersburg, W. Va., had an attack of agrippa which left her bad kidney trouble, and she suffered such severe pain and backache. Then she heard of Foley's Kidney Pills and says: "After taking them a short time the pain left my back and I am again able to do my own housework. Foley's Kidney Pills helped me wonderfully." Malchus Southern.....$24.00
J. L. Huey.....$83.00
G. E. Ransom.....$6.00

Eg. Moses Scott reported that the cost of opening the new road from the Union and Rabbit Hash grade to East Bend road was $284.75 and the same was ordered paid out of the road fund.

The bridge spanning Woolper creek at Plattsburg was ordered painted.

The Peck Hammon bid of $1,363 for installing a heating plant at the county infirmary was accepted.

Jake Cook's bid of $800 for building cellar at county infirmary was accepted. The cellar is to be 33x23x10 feet, the floor and walls to be of concrete and have a flue running to the top of the building. Cook is to furnish the material and put the same on the ground.

County Attorney N. E. Riddell, Esq. E. J. Aylor and Superintendent of the County Infirmary, F. H. Rouse, were appointed a committee to superintend building of the cellar and installing the heating plant at the county infirmary.

The court made the following order in regard to the working of the county roads:

It is ordered by the court that the roads of this county for the year 1912 be and they are ordered to be worked by taxation and the allotment of hands.

It is ordered by the court that all grading be done by the first day of July, and all dumps of dirt shall be leveled and smoothed down at the time they are placed on the roads, and all large clouds and lumps of dirt shall be broken up and the road smoothed and made fit for travel, at the time it is worked.

All metal shall be placed on the road, broken and spread not later than the first day of November, except repairs with knapped stone which may be done at any time. Eight hours constitute a day work on the roads.

The overseers shall report to the Fiscal Court, which holds its terms on Tuesday after the First Monday in January, April, July and October, the amounts and kind of work done by them, and the date on which it was performed and in what locality of their districts, and any supplies purchased or furnished by him, which report must be accompanied by receipts for money expended for such supplies and the Fiscal Court after auditing said accounts, will order said overseers to be paid for their services and money expended.

It shall be the duty of the overseer to report to the Fiscal Court the number of hands and the time worked by each, and the nature and amount of work performed, and to give such hands drafts of the time so worked by them, which will be paid when presented by the original holder or his assignee, to the sheriff at any time, provided, however, such drafts must be presented in thirty days from date of issue.

The overseers shall find out from the sheriff the amount of money due their respective districts, and shall not cause to be expended, by work done, supplies furnished or purchased and drafts issued, more money than is due such district, and they shall use the money set apart for their respective districts this year, except a few dollars may be kept on hand for emergencies, and as much of the road fund as is practical shall be used in placing metal on the road.

It is recommended that when practical overseers drag their roads in early spring.

Overseers shall execute bond in the County Court in double the amount of money due their respective districts, and properly qualify in said court before entering upon the discharge of their duties. He will pay for one man and a team of two horses, per day, not to exceed three dollars and fifty cents in addition thereto for each extra horse, and for a man not to exceed $1.00, except when it is necessary to employ stone masons or carpenters, and they will be contracted for at the customary price in that locality.

Overseers may do as much of the work themselves as they see fit, under the above regulations, but shall not issue drafts to themselves.

Overseers will be furnished blanks upon which to make out their reports, and receipts for money expended by them, and drafts to be given hands as above set out, and each overseer will be expected to comply with the terms and directions of this order.

The Sheriff will keep a book to be furnished by the county showing the name of each overseer, and the amount due such district, and he will charge to said district the amounts paid such overseer and the sums of money paid to hands on the drafts of that overseer.

The overseers are ordered and directed to expend at least 40 per cent of the road fund coming into their hands in hauling, breaking and spreading stone.

The drafts above mentioned, when paid by the Sheriff, shall be kept by him and filed as vouchers with his settlement.

DE LAVAL CREAM SEPARATORS

First ever since

Save Their Cost Every Year of Use

If you are thinking about buying a cream separator, and have only a small amount of ready cash to invest, don't be tempted to put your money into one of the so-called, "cheap" machines. Why pay your hard-earned money for a "cheap," trashy machine, when you can buy a reliable De Laval upon such liberal terms that

It will more than earn its cost while you are paying for it.

When you buy a De Laval you have positive assurance that your machine will be good for at least twenty years of service, during which time it will save every possible dollar for you and earn its original cost over and over again.

If you purchase the so-called "cheap" separator, you must pay cash in advance and then take the chance of the machine becoming worthless after a year or two of use, to say nothing of the cream it will waste while it does last.

More De Laval machines are in use than any other make. There is a reason. Come in and we will tell you why.

Serum to Prevent Hog Cholera.

From a State appropriation of $2,000 in Kentucky for the manufacture and distribution of the anti-hog cholera serum to control and suppress outbreaks of hog cholera, a small laboratory was erected at Lexington, on State grounds, under the direction of the Department of Animal Husbandry of the Kentucky Experiment Station. On February 22, 1913, actual operations began, and the Station officials themselves have inoculated 146 herds, including 5199 animals, of which 4707 animals survived showing a mortality of 8.4 per cent. The serum alone method was used on 93 herds, including 3393 animals, of which 318 died, or a mortality of 11.3 per cent. 52 herds were treated by the serum simultaneous method, including 2937 animals of which 119 died, or a mortality of 4.7 per cent. The loss, at first thought, may seem extremely large, but it should be remembered that a large percentage of the animals were vaccinated with high temperatures upon the urgent request of the owners. To distinguish between the serum alone and the serum simultaneous method including remembered that serum only is used where the infection is already present, to protect the sound animals, that remain in the herd. The serum simultaneous method is used where the disease does not exist in the herd. There is injected into the opposite thigh, in addition to the serum alone and the serum method, a small amount of virus. The result of either of the two methods is a life-long immunity to the animal. The value of the serum inoculation for the prevention of hog cholera has passed beyond the experimental stage, and the time is now at hand when the State must take steps to prevent the enormous losses to our swine industry. To check and control hog cholera in Kentucky means the saving of a vast amount of money and the farmers are fast realizing that they must have their hogs immune to this disease. Last year one county in the State of Kentucky suffered a $50,000 loss from this disease alone, and the loss to the entire state is probably in the millions. The present legislature which has just adjourned, re-imposed the Experiment Station, with a small appropriation, and a portion of this will be used to increase the capacity for serum production. Heretofore, serum has been quoted at the rate of two cents per cubic centimeter, or 98 cents to vaccinate a 100-pound hog, but this price has been lowered to one cent per c. c., or costing the farmer 10c to the 100-pounds. This will be a great inducement for farmers to immunize their hogs against this disease, for heretofore the price of the serum has caused many to avoid it.

Second in importance to the serum treatment itself, is the fact that pigs from immune dams inherit a marked degree of immunity. This, however, is not retained for life, but it has been found that by treating the sucking pigs from immune dams on or before they are 3 weeks old, with a very small amount of the unmitigated virus, a permanent immunity results, interfering with the health of the animal. This will be a great stimulus for swine breeders to keep immune dams, as the cost of immunizing the off-spring before it is three weeks old is practically nothing. We have not had unlimited experience in immunizing sucking pigs from immune dams but to date we have experimented on about 95, with a loss of two, neither of which showed lesions of cholera on post mortem examination.

Ed Callahan Dead.

Jackson, May 12.—Ed. Callahan, Breathitt County, ex-sheriff, former Sheriff and feudist, who was shot from ambush while standing in his store at Crockettville, Saturday, May 3, died this morning at Buckhorn, Doctor Brice's residence, to save him, but pneumonia set in the right lung shortly after the shooting and caused his death.

Callahan will be buried at the home graveyard at Crockettville tomorrow afternoon. Just before he died Callahan was asked for a statement, and he said: "I know that I will die, I have forgiven all my enemies, and I want them to know it, and I want all my people to live in peace, pull together and do the best they can. I have been trying to live as I should for the last five years, have been honest with the business of no other man, and I do not think I should have been murdered while attending to my own business and at work. I believe that I will go to a better world, and I want my people to live right and meet me there."

"I want my little boy educated. I want to be buried by my dear old mother. She was my true friend and I expect to meet her above."

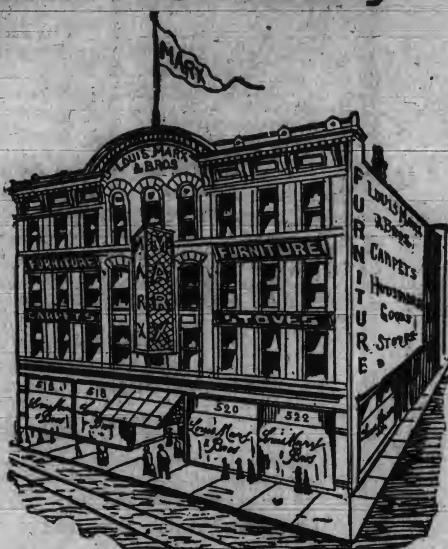

No arrests have been made, and no clue to the identity of the assassins has been made known.

The Fine High Bred Percheron Stallion,

PRINCE OLSEN

Will make the season of 1912 at my farm two miles west of Walton, Boone County, Ky., at $10.00 to insure a living colt, the great draft horse, a lien retained on colt until season money is paid.

PRINCE OLSEN was foaled in 1907, and is one model of his class. He weighs 1620 pounds and is nearly 17 hands in height. He is a beautiful black, and is a picture of symmetry and fine points of the draft horse. His breeding qualities are excellent.

PRINCE OLSEN was sired by Blackmon, a registered Percheron stallion owned by Ole G. Olsen, of Shabbona Grove, Illinois, where he was foaled in 1907, and from whom he was purchased by me last spring, selecting this horse over many others because of his excellent qualities. Prince Olsen is worthy of registry, and is one of the highest bred draft horses ever in this section of the country. The dam of Prince Olsen was a high bred registered Percheron mare, I feel that farmers and breeders will make no mistake in breeding to Prince Olsen as it means a good deal of long colt with meet every requirement on the farm. One of the lacking features of our horses is the size and strength. With the well bred Percheron like Prince Olsen these essentials are fully incorporated.

Come and see the horse and inspect his good points and you will breed to him.

Also at the same place and under the same conditions I will offer for public service my fine breeding jack.

BEN

is a black Jack with neatly points, six years old, 15-3 hands high, large bone and big body, very long ear, and has proven himself to be one of the best breeders in Kentucky. His mules are quick sellers and several have been sold at $25 at weaning time. His service fee will be $10.

Care will be taken to prevent accidents but I will not be responsible should any occur.

The High Class Saddle and Harness Stallion,

BELL'S FITZSIMMONS,

2844 A. S. B. A.

Will make the season of 1912 at the W. L. Norman Stock Farm at Walton, Ky., and if you want a show horse breed to him.

BELL FITZSIMMONS is a dark bay, 16 hands, weighs 1200 pounds, with three white feet, snip and star, and style and action. He was sired by BRACKEN CHIEF 2148, by Harrison Chief 1808 by Clark Chief (89); dam Kit Hardy (2380) by Indian Chief (1718); 1st dam Miss Berry 6094, by Rockrick 108; by Mambrino Le Grande (99); 2d dam, by Well's Yellow Jacket 112; 3d dam by Gray Eagle.

Miss Berry is also the dam of Woodland Chief, one of the finest show horses in Kentucky. Woodland Chief is a full brother to Bell's Fitzsimmons and a full brother to Rhoderick, and one of the finest geldings ever showed, and sold to a party in Texas for $1,000.

BELL'S FITZSIMMONS is also the sire of the champion walk-trot gelding, Mac Coyne, showed at the Horse Shows in the fall of 1909 and sold for $3,500, and also the champion harness mare showed by C. C. Harris.

L. T. Anderson, of Maysville, one of the largest dealers in the State, says some of the highest class horses he has handled have been by Bell's Fitzsimmons.

The greatest show, harness and saddle horses of our state have sprung from the loins of Harrison Chief and Indian Chief. Where can you find a horse of better breeding than Bell's Fitzsimmons? He has been a winning show horse ever since he was handled by me.

Personal care over all stock. Mares left on good pasture at 10c a day at owner's risk.

$10.00 to insure a mare in foal the money due when the fact is ascertained or the mare is parted with.

Don DeGozee

The Belgian Draft Horse, foaled in 1908, will make the present season at E. J. Aylor's stable one and one-half miles from Hebron, Boone County, Ky., at $10.00 to insure a colt to stand up and suck, money due when colt comes or the mare is parted with or leaves the county.

Don DeGozee, despite his great size and weight is well balanced throughout, perfectly proportioned and symmetrically built. He has as light action as a stallion of much smaller type, and his disposition is much better than is usually found in horses of blood strains. He is a beautiful dark sorrel, 17 hands high, weighs 1,700 pounds, has a broad, flat foot, heavy bone, fine style and action. This great breed of draft horses is especially known for better action than any other draft horse for heavy, good bone and good hoofs, and gentle, kind workers.

Don DeGozee's dam Della Wire, brown mare, the great draft horse mare of Campbell County, Kentucky, sired by Bayard DeGozee No. 2188, whose Belgian Stud Book number is 1870, bred by Mr. Baillet-Latour, DeGozee, sired by Morton (312), he by Brilliant (709), out of Coats (709), dam Catherine DeGozee (2183), she by Lion (766), out of May (2421).

Harrison Prince

will make the present season at the stable of G. T. Gaines, one mile from Burlington on the Petersburg pike at $20 to insure a living colt.

HARRISON PRINCE is a chestnut stallion, 16 hands high, 4 years old, has a large blaze face, two white feet, and is the perfect type of a saddle horse with fine finish and action, a champion in his class from a colt. Harrison Prince comes from a family of show horses on both sides, and is a show horse himself, and should sire show horses. His sire is Dandy Jim, 2d, 1581, the well known show horse by McChieff, 1451, by Rex (2484), 839, by Rex Denmark, 840, he by Crigger's Denmark by Old Denmark Chief.

His dam, Mary Neal, 1806, also a show mare, by Boyd Wilks, by Favorite Wilks; 2d dam, Skiddies, by Washington Denmark, Jr., by Washington Denmark 64.

Care will be taken to prevent accidents, but I will not be responsible should any occur.

In 1913 a premium of $20 will be given for the best and $10 for the second best colt of this year's get of Harrison Chief.

HIGH VINE, No. 2733.

Foaled in Spring of 1904

By Highland Gales 1677.
Grand sire, Highland Denmark, 730 Dam, Belle, 2832, by Shropshire Kentucky Squirrel, 1865; 2nd dam, Ida May by Fayette Denmark, 60; 3d dam, Maxey by Granger; 4th dam, Mary by Export, 77.

HIGH VINE is a five gaited Saddle Stallion, eight years old, 16 hands high, and weighs 1500 lbs., is a rich golden chestnut in color, and a perfect model in conformation.

HIGH VINE is a uniform breeder and reproduces his own kind. The show record of his colts is unequalled by the colts of any sire in this section of country. His colts have been shown at various fairs and have never been defeated in their class, and in addition awakened public admiration everywhere. In several instances the owners of High Vine colts have been offered $200 for the colts at weaning time, and this handsome price was refused by the said owners as all of them believed the colts to promise much better as they developed. This must be a fine thing in the breeding when $200 offers for weanling colts are rejected by owners whose are governed by business.

High Vine colts are the products of their farm. Take a look at any of High Vine's colts and you will see the style and attractive qualities that make the price in a high class.

HIGH VINE will make the season at the stable of W. Lee Gaines on the Lexington pike, midway between Walton and Hebron, Boone County, Ky., at $20.00 to insure a live foal season money due if mare is parted with. No responsibility for accidents. Make engagements ahead of time. Services are limited, and it save annoying delays.

For the accommodation of those, from a distance Mr. Gaines will pasture a few mares at $2.50 per month, with best facilities for their care.

PREMIUM:—Free season for 1913 will be given the owner of the best foal of the year, to be shown at the Florence fair at the High Vine colts show.

The nine graduates exhibited the splendid work of this excellent school, and proved beyond doubt that the principal, Prof. J. G. Prather, was one of the best instructors the high school has ever had. He has not only been a faithful worker, but he has been very painstaking to see that the graduates came up to the highest standard of excellence more on their account than any credit work. The graduates and their subjects were as follows: Seniors, Edna Watson; Essay, "Power for the World" Betterment; Thos. Fields; Gifford, Jane Dickey, cleverly interlarded in the ordinary program, and very neatly discharged by Miss Dickey. Essay—"Amor Omnia Vincit"; Class History, Blanche Kennedy; Class History, Jane Bristow; Sketch of Beethoven's life with a musical illustration from "Sonata Pathetique"; Thos. J. Hughes; Class History, Elma Taylor; Class Will, Jessa Carroll, and the Valedictory by Fred Miller, the latter being a splendid thought and well delivered. The exercises were interspersed with vocal and instrumental music of a most pleasing character. Rev. Edgar C. Good to Yourself was the theme of one of the most pleasing and thoughtfully presented by Dr. Yeager in a manner that left a salutary impression. The graduates were the recipients of many beautiful presents and lovely flowers, and were truly deserving of all for they proved themselves to be faithful, earnest students.

K. Wallace, of Morgantown, President of the Kentucky Bankers' Association. Judge E. S. Clark of Falmouth, made a suggestive talk on "Real Estate" and that developed considerable discussion. Mr. Larkin of Newport, took up the subject of "Married Women as Sureties," in a way that developed thought and information. Robert L. McCabe, of Columbus, Ohio, made an address on "Currency Reform," and secured a favorable expression from the meeting on the subject. They Want Their Money.
Growers who have tobacco in the pool are growing restless because of the realizing thereon. Those who have charge of the pools business acknowledge to having a large amount of money in their hands belonging to the growers and are hatching all kinds of excuses for retaining it. Some of the excuses which they are holding back. In the pool are yet several thousand hogheads of tobacco, amply enough to satisfy the growers. The Tobacco Society against any liability that may accrue against it on account of the pending litigation in which it is involved, and there is no good reason why the growers should be kept out of their money now in the hands of the society. Distributions have been promised, but again only to disappoint those who have long been awaiting anxiously the money that belongs to them and which they are paying interest on. Somebody is making a profit on the very large sum of money which has been realized for the pooled tobacco sold and retained. Can it be that those who have control of the pooled tobacco are handling it for their own benefit, while the grower, who is generally a man of very moderate means, is paying the freight. The amount of money that is in the hands of the officers of the pool and the delay in its distribution is breeding in the minds of the growers a belief that there is something rotten in Denmark. The growers know that hundreds of thousands of dollars that they ought to have in their pockets or in bank in existence, but do not believe that it is lying idle while they are paying interest on the money the notes for which they expected to cancel with the money arising from the sale of their pooled tobacco. They are being inconvenienced by the delay in distribution and are anxious to know into whose pocket will go the interest that by a proposition of theirs is to be a large amount of money the pool has had on hands for many months. The growers did not originate at a reasonable delay in realizing on the pooled tobacco, but they are now restless and anxious for a showing on the part of the pool officials, who they expect at all times with an excuse—though a poor—to quiet them.

At the time Kentucky Democrats ought to be at peace with all the world and especially with each other is the very time the big guns of the party select to open the campaign of abuse. Other vials of vitriol abuse. They invariably start out proclaiming that harmony ought to be the party watch-word, but in a few weeks the storm bursts and a campaign of personal abuse follows that ought to consign everyone taking part therein to political oblivion. So long as Kentucky Democrats continue to be swayed by the selfish political blights with which the party is cursed so long will it be debilitated and finally it will be destroyed. The only consolation the Democrats have is that the Republican party in the State is laboring under the same handicap.

It would surprise you to know of the great good that is being done by Chamberlain's Tablets. Dr. J. W. Jones, of Newburg, Kentucky, N. B. writes, "My wife has been using Chamberlain's Tablets and finds them very effective and are doing her lots of good." If you have any trouble with your stomach or bowels, give them a trial. CHAPTER VIII.

Soon Companions.
Some time later the judge was aware of a step on the path beyond his door, and glancing up, saw the tall figure of a man pause on his threshold. A whispered curse slipped from between his lips. Aloud he said:

"Is that you, Mr. Mahaffy?" He got no reply, but the tall figure, propelled by very long legs, stalked into the shanty and a pair of keen, restless eyes deeply set under a high, bald head were bent curiously upon him.

"I take it I'm intruding," the newcomer said sourly.

"Why should you think that, Solomon Mahaffy? When has my door been closed on you?" the judge asked, encuing a most extraordinary coincidence. When I went to the war of '12, a Hazard accompanied me as my orderly. His grandson is back of that curtain now—sleep—in my bed!" Mahaffy put down his glass.

"You were like this once before," he said darkly. But at that instant the shuck tick rattled noisily at some movement of the sleeping boy. Mahaffy quitted his chair, and crossing the room, drew the quilt aside. A glance sufficed to assure him that in part, at least, the judge spoke the truth.

There was a knock-beat on the road. It came nearer and nearer, and presently sounded just beyond the door. Then it ceased, and a voice said:

"Hullo, there!" The judge scrambled to his feet, and taking up the candle, staggered into the yard. Mahaffy followed him.

"What's wanted?" asked the judge holding his candle aloft. The light showed a tall fellow mounted on a handsome bay horse. It was Murrell.

"Have either of you gentlemen seen a boy go through here today?" Murrell glanced from one to the other. Mr. Mahaffy's thin lips twisted themselves into a sarcastic smile. He turned to the judge, who spoke up quickly.

"Did he carry a bundle and rifle?" he asked. Murrell gave eager assent.

"Well," said the judge, "he stopped here along about four o'clock, and asked his way to the nearest river landing."

"Hannibal—" the judge's voice and manner were rather stern. "Hannibal, a man rode by here last night on a big bay horse. He said he was looking for a boy about ten years old—a boy with a bundle and rifle."

There was an awful pause. "Who was that man, Hannibal?"

"It were Captain Murrell." The judge raised his fist and brought it down with a great crash on the other. "We don't know any boy ten years old with a rifle and bundle!" he said.

"Please—you won't let him take me away, judge—I want to stop with you!" cried Hannibal. He slipped from his chair, and passing about the table, seized the judge by the hand. The judge was visibly affected.

"No!" he roared. "He shan't have you. Is he kin to you?"

"No," said Hannibal. "He tried to get me away from my Uncle Bob."

"Where is your Uncle Bob?"

"He's dead." And the child began to weep bitterly. The judge bent and lifted him into his lap.

"There, my son—" he said soothingly. "Now you tell me when he died, and all about it."

"He were killed. It were only yesterday, and I can't forget him. I don't want to—but it hurts—it hurts terrible!" Hannibal buried his head in the judge's shoulder and sobbed aloud. Presently his small hands stole about the judge's neck, and that gentleman experienced a strange thrill of pleasure.

"Tell me how he died, Hannibal," he urged gently. In a voice broken by sobs, the child began the story of their flight, a confused narrative. The judge shuddered. "Can such things be," he murmured at last. Then he remembered what Mahaffy had told him of the man on the raft. "Hannibal," he said, "Solomon Mahaffy, who was here last night, told me he saw down at the river landing, a man who had been fished up out of the Elk—a man who had been roughly handled."

"Were it my Uncle Bob?" cried Hannibal, lifting a swollen face to his.

"Dear lad, I don't know," said the judge sympathetically.

"It were Uncle Bob! I know it were my Uncle Bob! I must go find him!" and Hannibal slipped from the judge's lap and ran for his rifle and bundle.

"Stop a bit!" cried the judge. "Now, if it was your Uncle Bob, he'll come back the moment he is able to travel. Meantime, you must remain under my protection while we investigate this man Slosson."

It was Saturday, and in Pleasantville a full-train was in progress. During all the years of its corporate dignity the village had never boasted any building where the evil-doer could be placed under restraint; hence had arisen its peculiar habit of dealing with crime; but a leading citizen had donated half an acre of town and the river landing as a site for the proposed structure, and the scattered population of the region had assembled for the raising.

"We don't want to get there too early," said the judge, as they quitted the cabin. "We must miss the work, but be on hand for the celebration."

"I suppose we may confidently look to you to favor us with a few eloquent words!" said Mr. Mahaffy.

"While you've been taking your life down at the steamboat," said Mahaffy, "I've been expect-

"His Grandson is Back of That Curtain, Now—Sleep—in My Bed."

but there was a guilty deepening of the flush on his face. Mr. Mahaffy glanced at the jug, at the half-emptied glass, lastly at the judge himself.

"You seem to be raising first-rate hell all by yourself."

"Oh, be reasonable, Solomon. You'd gone down to the steamboat landing," said the judge plaintively. By way of answer, Mahaffy shot him a contemptuous glance. "Take a chair—do, Solomon!" entreated the judge.

"When did I ever sneak a jug into my shanty?" asked Mahaffy sternly, evidently conscious of entire rectitude in this matter.

"I deplore your choice of words, Solomon," said the judge. "You know damn well that if you've been here, you couldn't have got past your place with that jug! But let's deal with conditions. Here's the jug, with some liquor left in it—here's a glass. Now what more do you want?"

Mr. Mahaffy drew near the table.

"Sit down," urged the judge.

"I hope you feel mean?" said Mahaffy.

"If it's any satisfaction to you, I do," admitted the judge.

"You ought to." Mahaffy drew forward a chair. The judge filled his glass.

"What's the news from the landing?"

Mahaffy brought his fist down on the table.

"I heard the boat churning away round back of the bend, then I saw the lights, and she slid up and they tossed off the freight. Then she churned away again and her lights got back of the trees on the bank. There was the lap of waves on the shore, and I was left with the half-dozen miserable loafers who'd crawled out to see the boat come in. That's the news six days a week!"

By the river had come the judge, tentatively hopeful, but at heart expecting nothing, therefore immune to disappointment and equipped for failure. By the river had come Mr. Mahaffy, as usual as the judge himself, and for the same reason, but sour and bitter with the world, believing all ways in the possibility of some miracle of regeneration.

At the judge's elbow Mr. Mahaffy changed his position with nervous suddenness. Then he folded his long arms.

"You asked if there was any news, Price; while we were waiting for the boat a raft tied up to the bank; the fellow aboard of it had a man he'd fished up out of the river, a man who'd been pretty well cut to pieces."

"Who was he?" asked the judge.

"Nobody knew, and he wasn't conscious. I shouldn't be surprised if he never opens his lips again. When the doctor had looked to his cuts, the fellow on the raft cast off and went on down the Elk."

It occurred to the judge that he himself had news to impart. He must speak for the boy's presence.

"While you've been taking your life down at the steamboat," said Mahaffy, "I've been expect-

Will Be Electrocuted.

WYTHEVILLE, VA., May 17.—Floyd Allen, patriarch of the outlaw gang that on March 17 assassinated five persons in Judge Massey's courtroom at Hillsville, will pay the penalty of death for his part in the murders.

This was the verdict of the jury, brought in today when court opened.

That the "12 men good and true" did not arrive at their decision without a bitter fight was indicated in the long time during which they deliberated. The case was given to the jury at 12:31 p. m. yesterday.

To stand and hear the verdict, the aged prisoner hobbled slowly to his place, his face grim and stern, but drawn in painful lines in the words of mountain men in the courtroom.

"Old Floyd took his medicine like a man," and lived up to the Allen tradition that none of the family ever flinched at death. Judge Staples postponed sentencing of Allen until the trial of the other members of the Allen gang shall be concluded.

This is the first conviction in the prosecution of the men who shot and killed Judge Massey, Sheriff Webb, Prosecutor Foster, Mayor Borden and Miss Betty Ayers, in the Hillsville courtroom on March 14.

The shooting came at the end of the trial of Floyd Allen, who was being sentenced to the penitentiary upon conviction of having assaulted a Deputy Sheriff. The Allen clan had vowed that none of their number would ever wear prison stripes, and they gathered in the courtroom in force.

Following the shooting they fled to the hills, but were hunted down and all captured except Sidna Allen, leader of the gang, and his nephew, Wesley Edwards.

In addition to Floyd Allen, his son, Victor, and his nephews, Claud and Freeel Allen, Sidna Edwards and Bud Marion, were under arrest, charged with first degree murder.

Floyd Allen, in his trial, pleaded self-defense, declaring that Sheriff Webb attempted to draw his revolver before any of the Allen crowd began to shoot.

Fattening Chickens.

The Pennsylvania Experiment Station recently conducted some tests on the fattening of cockerels for market. Two types of breeding and care were represented by the fowls selected, viz., ordinary farm-raised and closely managed, egg-laying types. Various rations and methods of confinement were compared. The number fowls forming the group representing a particular method was ten in each case.

The results showed that farm-raised poultry of the Plymouth Rock and Rhode Island Reds breeds may be fattened in crates or pens at a cost for food of 10 to 12 cents per pound of gain. No difference appeared in the ~~fat~~ ^{fat} ~~crates~~ ^{crates} and pen-fattened fowls, but with fowls of these kinds close confinement resulted in greater economy per pound of gain. Thin fowls made the cheapest gains. Fine-ground grain and rations rich in protein gave the better results. Milk was superior to meat scrap as a source of protein.

In the case of the more active, egg-laying breed, represented by Leghorn cockerels, fattening was profitable with fowls weighing up to 2-3 pounds, but not beyond that limit at present food and poultry values. The costs of gain with this breed ranged from 3.25 to 12 cents per pound. With the lighter birds, regular growing rations were superior to special fattening mixtures, and close confinement was not as advantageous as conditions permitting some exercise.

New School Law.

Under the new state law governing the apportionment of the state school fund, it is believed by the heads of the educational department that school attendance will be improved. The new law requires money to be paid teachers on a basis of school attendance, as well as qualifications to teach, thus encouraging the teachers to get the pupils to the school every day. Prof. Barkdale Hamlet, superintendent of public instruction, and Prof. T. Coates, superintendent of rural schools are at work on a plan for paying the teachers under the new law. Under the old law a teacher was paid regardless of the number of pupils in attendance, and it is said in some of the schools the attendance was allowed to fall off by reason of the fact that the teachers did not care. Under the new plan a teacher will not be allowed a minimum salary, and this will be increased as the percentage of attendance in the school increases. Last year and for several years past only one third of the pupils enrolled attended school during the year. It is hoped to raise this next year to at least 50 per cent.

John R. Staton, Joyce, Ky., had an exceptionally severe attack of whooping cough. He says: "If it had not been for Foley's Honey and Tar Compound I would have been compelled to quit work. Instead, I never missed a day, and Foley's Honey and Tar Compound gave me instant relief and is the only cough medicine we ever use." Contains no opiates. The demand for an improvement in Kentucky roads will not down, but, on the contrary, appears to be increasing, and many of the counties are proposing to bond themselves heavily for the purpose of putting their public roads in good condition. By this means the present generation will not have to bear all the burden of building good roads, but it will string out for those to come to contribute their part.

CALIFORNIA LETTER

A Description of A Trip to The Land of Sunshine and Flowers

At 6 p. m., Tuesday, Feb. 28, 1912, our party, a very peculiar little group of young people, two of the party being money-moon tourists, left Cincinnati with its four inches of snow and winter winds, over the Baltimore and Ohio, for the land of sunshine and flowers, Los Angeles, California. We left rather reluctantly as we were bid a last farewell by a large group of intimate friends, brothers and sisters, with best wishes for a happy and eventful journey to our future home.

Leaving Cincinnati at this time of day prevents any sight seeing until morning. Our car was not crowded but comfortably filled with Western homeseekers, principally young people. The first night's rest on a comfortable sleeper being fairly pleasant we awoke to find our train some three hours behind schedule time and still in dear old Kentucky. We had reached the southernmost town in the South Western part of the State, Fulton. We could not notice much change at this point in the climate, conditions but as we sped on to the Southland, passing through hemp and cotton fields, now and then a small stream with its fringed banks, we soon experienced a slight change. The air was soft and balmy, the sunshine more brilliant and we welcomed the spring-like atmosphere after having endured the coldest winter of our experience.

At noon Wednesday we arrived in Memphis, now traveling over the Illinois Central railroad, the busy western metropolis of Kentucky's sister State, Tennessee. Our party left the car for a look around as our train stopped here about 30 minutes. We enjoyed watching the southern negroes, of which there are a few, handling the hundreds of bales of cotton at this shipping point, the Southern method of transportation being rather odd to us at least. We saw no horses, but one mule was hitched to a two-wheeled dray making up the outfit for conveying this great southern product to the shipping center. After visiting the Memphis Union station, as we were cautioned not to stroll too far from our train, and sending a few postal cards to home folks we heard "All aboard" and continued our trip to the Mississippi and Louisiana plantations. The Illinois Central railroad traversing the western center of Mississippi, gave the tourists slight opportunity to see that State's best country as they pass thru sage brush and marsh land fully two thirds of the length of the whole State. Ice and snow were now a thing of the past and we could really say, "hot again." Arriving in Jackson, the capital at 7:30 p. m., we were again deprived of any sight seeing. My first impression upon entering the Southland was that of an easy, non-progressive people, just as we passed on it became more and more evident that that great section of our country is awakening from the slumbers of the past and one can see that many years hence the South can boast, as the North, of its progressiveness in commerce, manufactures and educational possessions.

Due to arrive in New Orleans at 10:30 p. m., and our train now running four hours late another night is spent in the tourist sleeper instead of at New Orleans. The arranged intention of our party. However, we found upon arriving the next morning that we had been in New Orleans since 1:30 a. m. Checking our suit cases we started to see the city and found it in a bustle, making preparations for Mardi Gras. New Orleans is truly a visit city and an ideal stopping place for the tourist seeking the simple, easy, never-hurry, Southern way of living. We saw a very noticeable contrast between our Northern and Southern cities. The first point of interest we visited was the New Orleans harbor, the second largest in the world. Here the Father of Waters makes this city an accessible point for the big ocean steamships plying between New York and London. While we stood on the wharf and looked out upon the broad expanse of water, above the city itself, our attention was attracted by a pleasure boat, the Sydney. Upon investigation we found that this boat is owned and operated by a friend of one of our party. This fortunate state of affairs brought about an invitation to take the Harbor trip at three o'clock. We accepted and after an excellent luncheon at Faubacher's restaurant, started for the river trip. Our boat was one of the largest pleasure boats on the Mississippi and started with a goodly number of sight-seers for this trip. The first point of interest called to our attention is one of Germany's largest war cruisers lying in the harbor. This gunboat carries a crew of 300 men, very plainly evident from the wash out on the line to dry, and in one of the latest type of Germany's modern vessels. We took particular notice at this point of the levee which excludes from sight the whole of the story of the residences along the river front. We saw a very peculiar cottage, the roof of very odd design, the home of the only lady in the United States who has been given a government license to operate as a pilot on the Mississippi river.

We next saw General Jackson's headquarters before the battle of New Orleans, an old plantation home, a fine type of old Colonial architecture, the largest American sugar refinery in the world, 14 stories in height. Capacity of this great plant is 12,000 barrels per day and employs 3,500 men, working day and night, most of the sugar being brought from the river in the brown state. At the turning point of our boat trip, 103 miles from the Gulf, we passed a massive structure of steel and concrete, one of the big mistakes of Uncle Sam, the new government docks costing two millions of dollars but never used. The sediment carried by this great river deposited so fast that the channel cannot be kept cleared in order that the large steamships can make a safe landing. As we started back up the river we saw on our left a broad expanse of truck farms, an orange tree laden with the golden fruit, and an old negro man walking the levee with a huge basket of drift wood on her head. Truck land is valued at $300 per acre, most of truck being raised for the French market.

Our attention was here directed to the continuous line of timber slats set on end and backed up with dirt to hold this great volume of water in its course. This arrangement extends up the river to Cairo, Ill. We passed the new United States coaling station for steamships, U. S. naval wireless telegraph station 50 feet high, a yacht at one time belonging to J. P. Morgan and used in the Spanish American war as a gunboat, so recently to a private party in Galveston, Texas for $2,500. The U. S. floating dry-docks, the second largest in the world, 525 feet long, and 110 feet wide, most wonderful piece of ingenuity, the hollow sides being filled with water, sinking the structure until the ship can enter and punting the sides empty, the ship is thereby raised above the water level for repairs, etc.

We concluded our trip passing the great string of New Orleans city docks named the prominent men of New Orleans. These docks line the river for 12 miles, and we passed several ocean liners loading and unloading their cargoes of various nature, coffee, bananas, cotton and lumber. We saw ships bound for Rotterdam, London, Liverpool, Havana, Honduras and other foreign ports. This feature of New Orleans, the great harbor, makes this the gateway to what is soon to be the linking together of the Atlantic and Pacific, the Panama Canal.

Another friend at this time brought to us an enjoyable auto ride through the business and residence sections of this city and we saw many beautiful homes as well as schools and colleges. After another visit to our eating place we boarded our train for San Antonio, Texas, where we made our next stop of 24 hours. We crossed the Mississippi river by ferry our whole train of engine and nine coaches being ferried across the river. Early in the morning found us scurrying across the plains of Texas, passing now a little hamlet, stopping occasionally for a change of engine on this railroad burn oil for fuel. Far across the fields we could detect great herds of what was at one time the Texas long horn, but by scientific breeding has almost eliminated this species of cattle. Miles of uninhabited country plainly shows that Texas, with her 2,500,000 people, can easily accommodate sixty million. Before we arrived at Houston, I beg to relate this amusing incident of last evening. You may have traveled on a sleeping car any distance know of the numerous amusing incidents that occur. This lady had probably never had a car accident before. I mean, of occupying an upper berth. For some reason the porter had left the car without preparing the berth for occupancy and in his absence madam was intent on retiring without any bed linen, she "lowed" the thing out to have a slip on it anyway. We arrived at Houston where we first experienced the first warm rain since last summer. We arrived at San Antonio, at 7:30 p. m., and found a busy hustling tourist town. Enjoying a good night's rest at Miss Platt's home we started on the morning to visit the "Alamo," the rugged, crumbling mass of ruins whose massive walls silently told the famous memories of the bloody rebellion of 1836 in which much heroism was displayed in the defense of this structure sacred to these people. We call to mind this siege of 12 days in which 500 men were slain, among whom was W. J. Bowie, after whom the bowie knife was named. The city government has some of this property and is razing the convent portion, while an effort is being made to preserve down to the main of the afternoon we visited another relic of ancient times, the old St. Joe Mission on the outskirts of the city. This massive structure was erected in 1721 and upon investigation we found that ancient methods of construction by the Spaniards have been handed down to our modern method of concrete construction. Truly amazing is the durability of the adobe concrete walls of which the old monastery were built. We are told that the furnishings, a few now being exhibited here, were brought from Spain. The old bell has lost its clapper, the winding bellify stairs are fast falling away, the old bake oven is burnt out and the grumbling masonry tells the story of age and decay. We have supper in the famous Mexican restaurant, all Mexican dishes on the menu and we enjoy this novelty very much along with the hot time, inwardly, that it affords. Our party, after a delightful day in this city, boarded the train for the final lap of our journey. We left one of our party here, Miss F. P. Morgan, who we owe a debt of gratitude, especially for her company from Cincinnati to San Antonio, being of that lively, true American girl disposition to make a long trip less tiresome and more pleasant, and we don't forget the kindness and hospitality of the whole Platt family. Our short stay was one of the most pleasant items of our trip to date.

Now for Los Angeles across the barren desert wastes of western Texas and Arizona. While the sandy dust was flying we had adobe huts were flitting by the car window we were informed of a very distinguished gentleman being a traveler on our train, and we felt quite honored that we could ride part of the way with the great Commoner, Mr. Jennings Bryan and wife. Being of Democratic persuasion, I can not help but have much admiration for this man who can not only hold his claims for a statesman, but a Christian man of integrity and character. I'd like to vote for him again if I ever get the chance.

As we neared our next stop of interest, El Paso, we were somewhat uneasy for we would arrive just in time for our share of the Mexican trouble on the border, but we found that city was of no special event. Monday morning we awoke on each side as far as eye could see to the base of the mountains, miles distant, vast and countless acres of desert vegetation—Cactus in all its different grotesque forms, while unpossessed of any beauty, is a very spectacular sight, giants standing like a sentinel guard over the sandy waste. We passed now and then a fertile spot made so by Peruvian irrigation. At night-fall we reached Yuma, Ariz., the hottest town in the U. S., but not so in the evening. We alighted and found sitting Turkish fashion within six feet of the railroad tracks about six hundred squaws, outspread before them their wares to sell—wampun belts, watch fobs and hundreds of various articles made of bone. We boarded our train and crossed the Colorado river at this point and entered the great Golden State, California. We were greeted in order that the car could be cleaned of 14 passengers upon arrival in Los Angeles at 8:30 p. m. found it very cool in this new land and as the dawn approaches we detected shadowy like, great palm trees and tall Eucalyptus trees. We had lost sight of the mountains for a time and scenes of home themselves. We passed the old St. Gabriel mission and in a few minutes arrived at the Southern Pacific Station, glad that we are home again, but not weary and tired at word seem because we have lived all the way through God's great out of doors. Having passed through or partly even of the great States and having feasted on the works of man and God to the extent that it was too interesting and beneficial to become tiresome, we were delighted to find the shining and warm in this the City of Homes, a garden as it were with the rugged mountains

than any other make of the same size

- 1—A TROY is bigger at the mouth than any other wagon. Look at the points marked "A". Then figure for yourself where the biggest strain comes. It's at the mouth of the skids.
- 2—A TROY 3 in. skids really measures 3 1/2 in. at the collar. See point marked "B". That makes the TROY a full size larger all the way through—skids, wheels, etc. Don't you want that added margin of safety?
- 3—The skids are oval, not round. See "A" again. Therefore they take in the full strength of the axle—just where the strength is needed most.
- 4—TROY axles are strictly cast, first-quality hickory. No other timber has the same carrying strength or resiliency. This is just an axle and skid talk. These things count—but they aren't all. We want you to know the TROY all over—from tongue to tail-board. Come in and let us show you why the TROY is the one best from every angle. You will like the price too—it's right.

CLOSE OF SCHOOL

Exercises Will Be Of Unusual Interest.

The events attending the close of the Boone Co. High School will begin with an entertainment on Saturday evening, June 1st. This will consist of a first class school drama, "The Deacon's Second Wife" and two shorter sketches, "The Speed Limit" and "American Beauties." This will be given by the students of the first, second and third years in High School. The plays are all spicy and wholesome, something that everyone will enjoy.

The baccalaureate sermon will be preached on Sunday morning by Rev. H. C. Wayman, of Walton. On Monday evening Class Day exercises will be held at Library Hall, largely in the hands of the Senior Class. The exercises will consist of speeches by all members of the class as follows: Class History—Alice Carter; Greeting—Robert Gaines; Poem—Mary Utz; Grumbler—John Northcutt; Last Will and Testament—Marietta Stephens; Prayer—Wilbur Kelly; Address to the Juniors—Ruth Kelly. These will be largely of a humorous nature. There will be several numbers of music, violin, piano and male quartet. Two short plays will also be given, both of which are fine. "Either a Zither" and "Our Awful Aunt." In this exercise will be exhibited the accumulated talent of these seven graduates.

Tuesday evening the Commencement exercises will be held at Library Hall. The full program will be published next week. It is sufficient at this time to say that the address to the class will be delivered by Prof. J. B. Dickey, of Bowling Green, President of Bowling Green University, and the diplomas will be delivered by Prof. F. C. Burton, of Frankfort, State Supervisor of Rural Schools. We are able to say that each of these addresses will be a treat for all who attend. E. L. Dix.

DIED OF HEART TROUBLE

Noah Barlow Found Dead in Field Where He Had Been Plowing.

Between four and five o'clock last Monday afternoon Noah Barlow, of Gunpowder neighborhood, was found dead in the field where he had been plowing. It is thought he had been dead but a short time, and the lines were yet around the body while the team was standing still. Mr. Barlow was believed to be in his usual health and ate a hearty dinner Monday. He was not a robust looking man but had lived a very active farm life, being always on the jump. "Uncle Noah" as he was familiarly known was 74 years old on the 5th day of last October, and is survived by one son, George Barlow, and one daughter, Mrs. Albert Robbins, and with the latter he made his home. He has two brothers, Henry and James M., and two sisters, Mrs. Albert Beemon, of this county, and Mrs. Rouse, of Missouri, living. His wife, who was a daughter of the late Robert Lane, died 22 years ago to the day, before her husband. The funeral was held at Hopeful at 11 a. m. yesterday. Rev. Slater conducted the services. Mr. Barlow had long been a worthy member of the Hopeful church, and was a good citizen, a splendid neighbor and an excellent gentleman whose sudden taking off is a shock to this part of the county.

Fatal Shooting.

The community was shocked on Saturday to learn that George H. Croxton of Dillsboro had three times shot Claude Palmer of this city at the home of Mrs. Emma Miller who resides on what is known as the Enoch Gatch farm in Washington township. The principals in the tragedy are about 30 years of age and single. Palmer had formerly worked for Mrs. Miller but Croxton was in charge of the farm the current year. The report relative to the cause of the shooting are conflicting and the facts will have to be brought out in the preliminary hearing. Palmer was three times wounded, and since died from their effects. Policemen Klingelhoff and Cox of Aurora went to the scene of the shooting, arrested Croxton and placed him in the city jail at that place whence he was brought to the county bastille by Sheriff Slater. Lawrenceburg Register.

Commencing with June 1st, the Burlington postoffice will be a U. S. Postal Savings Bank, the postmistress has been supplied with the necessary blanks for conducting the business. Deposits will range as low as one dollar and all deposits must be in even dollars.

Resolutions of Respect.

Resolutions of the W. M. U. and Ladies Aid Society of the Big and Baptist church in memory of our beloved sister, Annie Lee Johnson. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

Whereas, It hath pleased our loving Heavenly Father to take from us our dearly beloved Sister, who Entered into that rest, that remaineth to the people of God, no March 12 1912.

Whereas, In the death of Sister Annie Lee, the church and Society have lost a most earnest, devoted, faithful and useful member. Circumstances did not always permit her to be present, yet her interest in all we did assured us of her hearty co-operation.

Whereas, She is the first member of our Society to be removed from us by death, we desire to bear testimony to her beautiful Christian character and the sweet and hallowed influence of her faithful life. She was quiet, patient, unassuming and uncomplaining. When but a child she was bereft of both Parents, but early in life she found Him, "whom to know is life Eternal," and began to lay up Treasures in Heaven. She loved her Savior, and knowing that she has gone to be with Him therefore, he it Resolved.

1st. That while we deplore her death, we rejoice that she has entered into her reward after much suffering here, to bask in the sunlight of God's Eternal love still.

2nd. That we deeply mourn our loss but humbly bow to the will of Him who doeth all things well.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon our minutes and a copy be sent to the Boone County Recorder for publication.

Com. Mrs. Elizabeth Huey,
Mrs. T. H. Huey.

Swat The Fly.

A little pamphlet called the Anti Fly Crusade contains the following rules for dealing with the fly nuisance:

Keep the flies away from the sick especially those ill with contagious diseases. Kill every fly that strays into the sick room. His body is covered with disease germs.

Do not allow decaying material of any sort to accumulate on or near your premises.

Screen all food, and insist that your grocer, butcher, baker and every one from whom you buy foodstuffs does the same.

Keep all receptacles for garbage carefully covered and the cans cleaned or sprinkled with lime, oil or other cheap preparations.

Keep the streets and alleys clean.

See that your sewerage system is in good order; that it does not leak, is up-to-date and not exposed to flies.

Four kerosene in the drains. Burn pyrethrum powder in the house to kill the flies, or use a mixture of formaldehyde and water one spoonful to a quart of water, this exposed in the room will kill all the flies.

Burn or bury all table refuse. Screen all windows and doors, especially in the kitchen and dining room.

If you see flies, you may be sure that the breeding place is in nearby filth. It may be behind the door, under the table or in the cuspidor.

If there is no dirt and filth there will be no flies.

If there is a nuisance in the neighborhood write at once to the Health Department.

"Health is wealth" and "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure."

There is more health in a house well screened than in many a doctor's visit.

The only safe way is to keep out the flies.

Can Take His Choice.

Frankfort—Under an opinion which has been given to Judge Robert L. Stout by the Attorney General's Department, Judge Stout can remove to Frankfort and continue as Judge of the new judicial district which was created by act of the last Legislature. The district consists of Franklin county, alone. If Judge Stout elects to continue as Judge in the new district, as is probable, Gov. McCreary will appoint a new Judge in the old district of Scott, Woodford and Bourbon instead of in Franklin.

There has been much discussion since the passage of the act creating the new district whether or not Judge Stout, who lives in Woodford county, could remove to Frankfort and continue as Judge of the new district. Judge Stout asked an opinion of the Attorney General's Department, and Judge M. M. Logan, assistant Attorney General after investigating the law and the authorities gave it as his opinion that Judge Stout can continue as Judge of the Franklin Circuit Court if he so elects.

Radical Changes.

At their General Conference held in Minneapolis, the Methodist adopted the following resolution:

"The American people are too far advanced any longer to be restricted by church rules as to what their amusements shall be. The rule prohibiting dancing, card playing, gambling and going to theaters, circuses and horse racing, therefore should be abolished."

In recommending these radical changes the twenty-four active bishops stipulated that the church however, should not be indifferent to these subjects, but that the people should be left to judge for themselves what is right or wrong in their amusements.

What a Potato Famine Would Mean.

This country has been passing through a season of potato scarcity. The experience has been somewhat unusual and rather quieting. No actual distress has been caused, but the eyes of the people have been opened to the importance of the tuber, as an article of food and they have come to see plainly what a real potato famine would mean.

It is not reassuring to be told that the American potato is now confronted by an entirely new enemy, more to be dreaded than any foe that it has been called upon to face in the past. That pestiferous bug that derives its name from the vegetables itself is bad enough, but according to expert authority it is far less dangerous than the potato wart, the introduction of which into this country is threatened. It has not got here yet, but whether it can be kept out is a serious question.

The new pest developed first in Germany and upper Hungary and has spread to other European countries. Now, it is reported it has obtained foothold on this side of the Atlantic, having reached Newfoundland. That is rather too close for comfort, particularly as scientific knowledge concerning this fungus growth that lurks in the soil and destroys whole crops is not so extensive that the success of quarantine measures against it is assured. The Department of Agriculture has issued a warning against the wart disease and will do all it can to exclude this wholly undesirable immigrant. Unfortunately the means at hand to prevent the entry of the potato wart are not the most effective, especially at a time when this country is importing so many potatoes.

NOTICE

To Whom It May Concern:—
To answer some inquiries from Boone County, relative to James P. Northcutt, we take pleasure in stating that he was twice elected to the office of assessor in this county, as the Democratic nominee; that he made a painstaking and efficient assessor, and gave perfect satisfaction; that he and his family are "died in the wool" Democrats, that he is a sober, upright, moral gentleman, and, we think, he deserves much credit for trying to make an honest living by work, crippled as he is.

He was born and raised in this county, of worthy parentage, and he has always conducted himself in a worthy and commendable manner. His father left this county a year or so before he did, and when his term of office expired he followed, to be at home. No family in the county enjoyed a better reputation and were more highly respected; and we are sure that the citizens of Bracken will appreciate seeing the citizens of Boone honor one of her most worthy sons.

STATE NEWS.

The Fiscal Court of Ballard county, and citizens of certain sections have entered into an agreement to gravel several miles of the public roads this year, the county to pay half the expense and the citizens to pay half. This is a good plan and Ballard county could well afford to emulate the example.—Bardwell News.

We are very glad to see Bell county taking a step forward in this road movement and as the bond issue has worked well in other parts of the county we see no good reason why it should not work well here, and why we could not in the next few years build a number of model roads.—Middleboro Thousanddicks.

In passing through some sections of the county it will be noted that some good work is being done on the pikes. One thing that will especially commend itself to the people is the fact that contractors in cleaning out the ditches are removing the dirt, so that it will not be back in its old place in the course of a few weeks. The work generally that is being done is better than in former years, and we hope that this will be true on all sections of the road during the whole year.—Springfield News-Leader.

The best thing that Union county could do if her people could only see it that way would be to vote all the time on the constitution allows for the construction of rock roads to the farthest possible limit to which the money realized from a bond sale would go. The saving in the maintenance of the roads every year would practically offset the interest charge and the people of this day of time would have the benefit and convenience of highways that can be traveled the year round and especially so during the winter months when the crops are being marketed and good roads are more needed.—Uniontown Telegram.

A Great Building Falls when its foundation is undermined, and the foundation of health—good digestion—is attacked, quick collapse follows. On the signs of indigestion Dr. King's New Life Pills should be taken to tone the stomach and regulate liver, kidneys and bowels. Pleasant, easy, safe and only 25 cents at all druggists.

High-Bred Trotting Stallion

Walter Winans

—No. 10400—

Trifol Record Over Half Mile Track

2:19

Season of 1912, at Jack Eads' farm, the former home of Jeff Roberts, on Lexington-pike, between Bracht Station and Crittenden, Ky. (on Cincinnati Southern R. R.)

Walter Winans' service fee for 1912 will be twelve dollars to insure a living colt. Money due when colt is foaled or mare parted with after being bred.

Walter Winans is a solid chestnut sorrel, is 16 hands high, weighed 1250 lbs. on Covington scales one year ago, and if right fat would weigh 1500; his disposition is perfect. His colts are uniformly good size and color, and the only one of his get that has been raced has race rec. of 2:11.

Walter Winans' breeding is fashionable, and is in a line with the greatest sires in the world, being a half brother to the great Crescius, 2:02 1/2 and the fine breeder, Wilstar, 2:17 1/2, whose colts always sold for high prices throughout Indiana and Kentucky.

Walter Winans, sired by Robert McGregory 587; dam Belle (dam of Kate Ham, 2:24, etc.) by Hotspur, Jr., 5812; grand dam Tugley by Mambrino Gift, 584, etc. (see Biles, Vol. 15), bred by Geo. Keckham, the owner and breeder of the celebrated Crescius and Wilstar.

Robert McGregory, 64; was sired by Major Edsall, 311; dam Nancy Whitman.

Colts by Walter Winans from good mares will be large, and if not great trotters will make fine road horses. Persons living at a distance can secure pasture for their mares.

A. R. MULLINS, Owner,
Covington, Ky.

ACE OF TRUMPS, JR.

Will make the season of 1912 at my stable 1 1/2 miles below Taylorport, on the Hedinger farm at Ten Dollars for one; for two, Eighteen Dollars; for three, Twenty-five Dollars, to insure a colt to stand up and suck, the money due if the mare is parted with after being bred. Ace of Trumps Jr. is a beautiful bay, heavy mane and tail, two white feet, snip in forehead, 16 hands high, weighs 1,475 pounds. He is a great stock horse and grand breeder. Ace of Trumps, Jr. is by Carlton A., 588; he by Nonestuch, 1650; he by G. Robinson, 1873; dam, Queen of Trumps, 3867; she by Ace of Trumps, 17; by S. Noble 1838; by G. G. Blackley 140.

CHARLES MUNTZ.

There never was a time when people appreciated the real merit of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy more than now. This is shown by the increase in sales and voluntary testimonials from persons who have been cured by it. "If you or your children are troubled with a cough or cold give it a trial and become acquainted with its good qualities. For sale by J. W. Berkshire & Son and E. E. Kelly.

THE PERCHERON STALLION,

BLACK BADGER,

Will make the present season at my stable on Burlington and Bellevue pike, four miles west of Burlington, Ky. at $10.00 to insure a colt to stand up and suck, money due if mare is parted with after being bred.

BLACK BADGER is black, 16 hands high, weighs 1,600 pounds, is recorded in the Percheron Stud Book of America. He was bred by W. S. Turbett, of Hanna City, Illinois, foaled May 24, 1902.

Also the Jack, MIKE, will stand at the same place on the same terms, $10.00.

Care will be taken to prevent accidents, but will not be responsible should any occur. For further particulars apply to

XEN SCOTT, Owner.

The Imported German Coach Horse,

Plutarch, 3183,

Will make the season of 1912 at my stable one mile west of Idelwild, Boone County, Kentucky, at $10.00 to insure a colt to stand up and suck, money due when the colt is foaled or the mare is parted with.

Plutarch is the 1911 get of this stallion, regardless of sex, to be shown at the Boone County Harvest Home this fall.

The Fine Black Jack,

LANKY BOB,

Will make the season at my stable at $8.00 to insure a colt to stand up and suck.

LANKY BOB is three years old, 15-3 hands high and a splendid individual.

In handling the above stock care will be taken to prevent accidents, but I will not be responsible should any occur.

Parties breeding to either of these animals must follow up the season. No business done on Sunday. Write for pedigree and particulars.

T. E. RANDALL,
R. D. No. 1, Burlington, Ky.

JOHN B

The fine Spanish jack will make the season of 1912 at Erlanger fair grounds, and will be permitted to serve mares at $10 to insure a living colt. For further information address A. F. CONNER or J. G. RENAKER, Florence, Kentucky.

Subscribe for the RECORDER.

The Fine High Bred Percheron Stallion,

PRINCE OLSEN

Will make the season of 1912 at my farm two miles west of Walton, Boone County, Ky., at $10.00 to insure a living colt. Persons parting with mares for the insurance money. A lien retained on colt until season money is paid.

PRINCE OLSEN was foaled in 1907, and is one model of his class. He weighs 1620 pounds and is nearly 17 hands in height. He is a beautiful black, and is a picture of symmetry and fine points of the draft horse. His breeding qualities are excellent.

PRINCE OLSEN was sired by Blackmon, a registered Percheron stallion owned by Ole G. Olsen, of Shabbona Grove, Illinois, where he was foaled in 1907, and from whom he was purchased by me last spring, selecting this horse over many others because of his excellent qualities. Prince Olsen is eligible to registry, and is one of the highest bred draft horses ever in this section of the country. The dam of Prince Olsen was a high bred registered Percheron mare. I feel that farmers and breeders will make no mistake in breeding to Prince Olsen as it means a good, strong colt that will meet every requirement on the farm. One of the lacking features of our horses is the size and strength. With the well bred Percheron like Prince Olsen these essentials are fully incorporated.

Come and see the horse and inspect his good points and you will breed to him.

Also at the same place and under the same conditions I will offer for public service my fine breeding jack.

BEN

is a black Jack with neatly pointed, six years old, 15.3 hands high, large bone and big body, very long ear, and has proven himself to be one of the best breeders in Kentucky. His mules are quick sellers and several have been sold at $125 at weaning time. His service fee will be $10.00. Care will be taken to prevent accidents but I will not be responsible should any occur.

JOSEPH READNOUR,
Walton, Ky.

The High Bred Stallion,

BELL'S FITZSIMMONS,

2844 A. S. B. A.

Will make the season of 1912 at the W. L. Norman Farm at Walton, Ky., and if you want a show horse bred to him.

BELL FITZSIMMONS is a dark bay, 16 hands, weighs 1500 pounds, has three white feet, snip and star, and lots of style and action. He was sired by

BRACKEN CHIEF 2148,
by Harrison Chief 1606 by Clark Chief (80); dam Kit Hardy (2830) by Indian Chief (1718); 1st dam Miss Berry 4084, by Roderick 104; by Mambrino Le Grande (90); 2d dam, by Well's Yellow Jacket 112; 3d dam, by Gray Eagle.

Miss Berry is also the dam of Woodland Chief, one of the finest show horses in Kentucky. Woodland Chief is full brother to Bell's Fitzsimmons and a full brother to Rhoderick, and one of the finest geldings ever showed, and sold to a party in Texas for $1,000.

BELL'S FITZSIMMONS is also the sire of the champion walk-trot gelding, Mat Coyne, showed at the Horse Shows in the fall of 1908 and sold for $3,000, and also the champion harness mare showed by C. C. Harris.

L. T. Anderson, of Mayville, one of the largest dealers in the State, says some of the highest class horses he has handled have been by Bell's Fitzsimmons.

The greatest show, harness and saddle horses of our state have sprung from the loins of Harrison Chief and Indian Chief. Where can you find a horse of better breeding than Bell's Fitzsimmons?

Personal care over all stock. Mares left on good pasture at 10c a day at owner's risk.

$15.00 to insure a mare in foal the money due when the fact is ascertained or the mare is parted with.

C. R. BEST,
Phone 14, Walton, Ky.

Also prepared to break colts and handle Saddle and Harness horses.

FOR SALE—Jersey cow and calf, also male Jersey calf. Apply to B. B. Grant, near Idelwild.

Don DeGoze

The Belgian Draft Horse, foaled in 1908, will make the present season at E. J. Aylor's stable one and one-half miles from Hebron, Boone County, Ky., at $10.00 to insure a colt to stand up and suck, money due when colt comes or the mare is parted with or leaves the county.

Don DeGoze, despite his great size and weight is well balanced throughout, perfectly proportioned and symmetrically built. He has a light action as a stallion of much smaller type, and his disposition is much better than is usually found in horses of blood strain. He is a beautiful dark sorrel, 17 hands high, weighs 1,700 pounds, has a broad, flat foot, heavy bone, fine style and action. This great breed of draft horses is especially known for better action than any other draft horse for heavy, good bone and good hoofs, and gentle, kind workers.

Don DeGoze's dam Della Wire, brown mare, the great draft show mare of the Empire County, Kentucky sired by Bayard DeGoze No. 2188, whose Belgian Stud Book number is 21670, bred by Mr. Baillieux E. of Goze, sired by Morton (312), he by Brilliant (179), out of Coatsie (700), dam Catherine DeGoze (21083), she by Lion (760), out of Marie (2421).

Great care will be taken to prevent accidents but we will not be responsible should any occur.

E. J. AYLOR & SON.

In 1913 we will give a premium of seven dollars for the best and three dollars for the second best horse colt and seven dollars for the best and three dollars for the second best mare colt of Don DeGoze's 1912 get, the show to be at the Boone Co. Harvest Home.

Harrison Prince

will make the present season at the stable of E. J. Gaines, one mile from Burlington on the Petersburg pike at $30 to insure a living colt.

HARRISON PRINCE is a chestnut stallion, 16 hands high, 4 years old, has a large blaze face, two white feet, and is the perfect type of a saddle horse with fine finish and action, a champion in his class for speed. Jim, 24, 1831, the well known show horse by McChief, 1461, by Rex McDonald, 883, by Rex Denmark, 840, he by Grigler's Denmark by Old Denmark Chief.

His dam, Mary Neal, 1905, also a show mare, by Boyd Wilks, by Favorite Wilks; 2d dam, Skiddies, by Washington Denmark, Jr., by Washington Denmark 64.

Care will be taken to prevent accidents, but I will not be responsible should any occur.

In 1913 a premium of $20 will be given for the best and $10 for the second best colt of this year's get of Harrison Chief.

H. T. GAINES.

HIGH VINE,

No. 2733.

Foaled in Spring of 1904

By Highland Gaines 1677.

Grand sire, Highland Denmark, 730. Dam, Bessie Sable, 2832, by Shropshire Kentucky Squirrel, 1865; 2d dam, Ida May by Fayette Denmark, 60; 3d dam, Macey by Granger; 4th dam, Mare by Expert, 7.

HIGH VINE is a five galloped Saddle Stallion, eight years old, 16 hands high, and weighs 1200 lbs., is a rich golden chestnut in color, and a perfect model in conformation.

HIGH VINE is a uniform breeder and reproduces his own kind. The show record of his colts is unequalled by the colts of any sire in this section of country. His colts have been shown at various fairs and have never been defeated in their class, and in addition awakened public admiration everywhere. In several instances the owners of High Vine colts have been offered $300 for the colts at weaning time, and this handsome price was refused by the said owners, as they felt the colts were developed. There must be something in the breeding when $300 offers for weaning colts are rejected by owners who are governed by business principles in the sale of the products of their farm. Take a look at any of High Vine's colts and you will see the style and attractive qualities that make the price in a sale.

HIGH VINE will make the season at the stable of W. Lee Gaines on the Lexington pike, midway between Walton and Richmond, Boone County, Ky., at $20.00 to insure a live foal season money due if mare is parted with. No responsibility for accidents. Make engagements ahead of his services are limited, and it save annoying delays.

For the accommodation of those from a distance Mr. Gaines will pasture a few mares at $2.50 per month, with best facilities for their care.

For the season of 1913 will be given the owner of the best High Vine colt exhibited at the Florence fair at the High Vine colt show.

SICKLY CHILD

Made Well By Vinol—Letters from a Grateful Mother

New Haven, Conn.—"My little girl, ever since her birth, was frail and sickly and nothing seemed to do her any good until we tried your cod liver and iron tonic, Vinol. As soon as she commenced to take it, I noticed an improvement in her health and appearance. She has now taken three bottles of Vinol, and from the good it has done her I can say it will do all you claim for it in building up and strengthening frail and delicate children." (Name furnished on request.)

Another mother of Chicago, Ill., writes: "I can not say too much in praise of Vinol for delicate, ailing children."

We ask every mother of a frail, sickly or ailing child in this vicinity to try Vinol on our agreement to return their money if it does not do all we claim.

Every issue of the Recorder carries quite a number of advertisements of live stock for sale in the vicinity of Burlington. GOOD ROADS PROBLEM.

How to Make Good Roads.

The people of Paducah and McCracken county, had a good roads meeting a few days ago, and instead of contenting themselves with a series of resolutions and advocating a bond issue they listened to a farmer from Missouri, who told them how he had made good roads out of ordinary Missouri mud. Wonderful to relate, this farmer, whose name is King, didn't have anything to sell, and didn't want to be hired to show the farmers of McCracken county how to do anything. He simply showed them how, by taking a log of a certain dimension, splitting it in half, and bolting the two halves together in a certain way, and dragging the roads with this crude road-making device with the aid of a team of mules, you could keep good roads and not have to depend upon any road supervisor on earth. It was all so perfectly simple that there were many doubting Thomases, and there will be among those who read this article. But the United States Government thinks enough of the plan of this man King that he has been engaged to go over the country at Government expense and talk on good roads. Mr. King says any boy can make this drag, and with the assistance of a team of mules can make a road that will shed rain and keep comparatively free from dust and mud.—Bowling Green Messenger.

The System Bad.

There is evidently a strong and growing sentiment everywhere for better roads. The present system is not an economical way of working the roads, neither does it produce satisfactory results. It is not showing any disrespect for the county officials to say this, as everyone in Carlisle county who is connected with the roads has not been seriously reprimanded in the performance of duty. But it is the system that is at fault. In Carlisle county, one of the smallest counties in the State, the farmers are taxed $10,000 every year for road purposes. This money is spent some time during the spring or summer months for the purpose for which it was collected, and by the first of the following year the money is all gone and the roads are in as bad condition as they were a year before. In ten years for instance, the sum of $100,000 is spent and the roads are in no better shape than at the beginning. It is this condition of affairs that is causing taxpayers in various parts of the country to take notice.—Bardwell News.

Porto Rico's New Wonder.

From far away Porto Rico came reports of a wonderful new discovery that is believed will vastly benefit the people. Raymond T. Marchant, of Barcelona, writes: "Dr. King's New Discovery is doing splendid work here. It cured me about five times of terrible coughs, also my brother of a severe cold in his chest and more than 20 others who used it. My advice: We hope this great medicine will yet be sold in every drug store in Porto Rico. For throat and lung troubles it has no equal. A trial will convince you of its merit. 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free. Guaranteed by all druggists."

Leading the Peaceful Life.

Close to Fulton lives a brother and sister on the farm on which they were born and they may truly be said to be living the peaceful life. The sister is 81 years old and the brother 78. It is said that though they are within two miles of Fulton that it has been 36 years since the sister was in town, and that in fact she stays so close to the home that it has been 38 years since she saw a creek that flows through a part of the farm. The brother and sister live alone and while the brother is in town frequently on business, his stays are short and it has been very few times that he has not been at home at night to keep the sister company and protect her.—Telegraph.

Flagged Train With Shirt.

Tearing his shirt from his back an Ohio man flagged a train and saved it from a wreck, but H. T. Alston, Raleigh, N. C., once prevented a wreck with Electric Bitters. "I was in a terrible plight when I began to use them," he writes, "my stomach, head, back and kidneys were all badly affected and my liver was in bad condition, but four bottles of Electric Bitters made me feel like a new man." You of their matchless merit for any stomach, liver or kidney trouble. Price 25 cents at all druggists.

Dehorning Cattle.

There is no advantage of an animal with horns over one without horns but there are several advantages of a hornless feeder. Both the butcher and the feeder make a discrimination against cattle with horns because first, from the feeder's standpoint, a hornless animal requires less room in sheds, at the feeding rack, and in shipping; second, from the butcher's standpoint, the flesh is not as often bruised or the hide punctured where there are horns. As a usual thing in shipping there is less loss in weight due to hornless animals remaining quieter. The discrimination made by butchers against cattle is not great but the cost of horns is in the

than any other make of the same size

- 1—A TROY is bigger at the mouth than any other wagon. Look at the points marked "A". Then figure for yourself where the biggest strain comes. It's at the mouth of the skids.
- 2—A TROY 3 in. skids really measures 3 1/4 in. at the collar. See point marked "B". That makes the TROY a full size larger all the way through—axles, wheels, etc. Don't you want that added margin of safety?
- 3—The skids are oval, not round. See "A" again. Therefore they take in the full strength of the axles—just where the strength is needed most.
- 4—TROY axles are strictly clear, first-quality hickory. No other timber has the same carrying strength or resiliency.

This is just an axle and skids talk. These things count—but they aren't all. We want you to know the TROY all over—from tongue to tail-board. Come in and let us show you why the TROY is the one best from every angle. You will like the price too—it's right.

Season of 1912, at Jack Ends' farm, the former home of Jeff Roberts, on Lexington pike, between Branch Station and Crittenden, Ky. (on Cincinnati Southern R. R.)
Walter Winans' service fee for 1912 will be twelve dollars to insure a living colt. Money due when colt is foaled or mare parted with after being

Walter Winans is a solid chestnut sire, is 16 hands high, weighed 1260 lbs. on Covington scales one year

1500; his disposition is perfect. His colts are uniformly good size and color, and the only one of his get that has been raced has race rec. of 2:11.
Walter Winans' breeding is fashionable, and is in a line with the greatest sires in the world, being a half brother to the great Crescius,
3:02 1/4 and the fine breeder, Wilstar, 3:17 1/4, whose colts always sold for high prices throughout Indiana and Kentucky.
Walter Winans, sired by Robert McGregory 647; dam Rilee (dam of Kate Ham, 2:28 1/4, etc.) by Hotsup, Jr., 8613; grand dam Tugles by Mambrino Gift, 684, etc. (see Rilee, Vol.

THE PERCHERON STALLION, BEN

Will make the season of 1912 at sure a living colt. Persons parting

PRINCE OLSEN was foaled in 1907, and is one model of his class.
He weighs 1500 pounds and is nearly 17 hands in height. He is a beautiful black, and is a picture of symmetry and fine points. He is a draft horse. His breeding qualities are excellent.
PRINCE OLSEN was sired by Blackmon, a registered Percheron stallion owned by Ole G. Olsen, of Shabbona Grove, Illinois, where he was foaled in 1907, and from whom he was purchased by me last spring, selecting this horse over many others because of his excellent qualities.
Prince Olsen is eligible to registry, and is one of the highest bred draft horses ever in this section of the country. The dam of Prince Olsen was a high bred registered Percheron mare. I feel that farmers and breeders will make no mistake in breeding to Prince Olsen as it means a good, strong colt that will meet every requirement on the farm. One of the lacking features of our horses is the size and shape. With the well bred Percheron like Prince Olsen these essentials are fully incorporated.
Come and see the horse and inspect his good points and you will breed to him.

Also at the same place and under the same conditions I will offer for public service my fine breeding jack.

BLACK BADGER,

Book of America. He was bred by at the same place on the same terms, cidents, but will not be responsible should any occur. For further par-

Will make the season of 1912 at the W. L. Norman Stock Farm at Walton, Ky., and if you want a show horse breed to him.
BELL'S FITZSIMMONS is a dark bay, 16 hands, weighs 1200 pounds, with the white blaze and white star, and lot of style and action. He was sired by
BRACKEN CHIEF 2148,
by Harrison Chief 1006 by Clark
Chief (80); dam Kit Harv (2880) by Indian Chief (1718); 1st dam Miss Berry 4084, by Roderick 104; 2d dam, Mambrino Le Grande (99); 3d dam, by Wells's Yellow Jacket, 112; 3d dam by Gray Eagle.
Miss Berry is also the dam of Woodland Chief, one of the finest show horses in Kentucky. Woodland Chief is a full brother to Bell's Fitzsimmons and a full brother to Rhoderick, and one of the finest geldings ever showed, and sold to a party in Texas for $1,000.
BELL'S FITZSIMMONS is also the sire of the champion walk-trot gelding, Mat Coyne, showed at the Horse Shows in the fall of 1908 and sold for $600, and also the champion harness mare showed by C. G. Harris.
L. T. Anderson, of Maysville, one of the largest dealers in the State, says some of the highest class horses he has handled have been by Bell's Fitzsimmons.
The greatest show, harness and saddle horses of our state have sprung from the loins of Harrison Chief and Indian Chief. Where can you find a horse of better breeding than Bell's Fitzsimmons? He has been winning show horse events since a suckling colt, and has proven himself a successful sire. Some of the highest priced saddles, harness and walk-trot horses that have left the State have been sired by him.
Personal care over all stock. Mares left on good pasture at 10c a day at owner's risk.
$15.00 to insure a mare in foal the money due when the fact is ascertained or the mare is parted with.

High Vine is a fine gaited Saddle Stallion, eight years old, 16 hands high, and weighs 1200 lbs. is a rich golden chestnut in color, and a perfect model in conformation.
High Vine is a uniform breeder and reproduces his own kind. The show record of his colts is unequalled by the colts of any sire in this section of country. His colts have been shown at various fairs and have never been defeated in their class, and in addition awakened public admiration everywhere. In several instances the owners of High Vine colts have been offered $300 for the colts at weaning time, and this handsome price was refused by the said owners. All of them believed the colts to promise much better as they developed. There must be something in the breeding when $300 offers for weanling colts are rejected by owners who are governed by business principles in the sale of the products of their farm. Take a look at any of High Vine's colts and you will see the style and attractive qualities that make the price in a sale.
High Vine will make the season at the stable of W. Lee Gaines on the Lexington pike, midway between Walton and Richwood, Boone county, Ky., at $20.00 to insure a live foal season money due if mare is parted annoying delays.

ture a few mares at $2.50 per month, with best facilities for their care.
Pasture—Free season for 1912

High Vine colt exhibited at the Florence fair at the High Vine colt show.

The Belgian Draft Horse, foaled in 1908, will make the present season at miles from Hobson, Boone County, Ky., at $10.00 to insure a colt to stand up and suck, money due when colt comes or the mare is parted with or leaves the country.

Don DeGoze, despite his great size and weight is well balanced throughout, perfectly proportioned and symmetrically built. He has a light action as a stallion of much smaller type, and his disposition is much better than is usually found in horses of blood strains. He is a beautiful dark sorrel, 17 hands high, weighs 1,700 pounds, has a broad, flat foot, heavy bone, fine style and action. This great breed of draft and gentle, kind workers.

HIGH VINE,

THE POPULARITY CONTEST

We certify that we counted the votes cast in the Boone County Popularity Contest to noon, Wednesday, May 29, 1913, and find it as follows:

SECTION No. 1.
Miss Pauline Kelly.....	153,125
Miss Alice Carver.....	110,448
Miss Estelle Huey.....	30,000
Miss Lizzie McGilgallon.....	22,000
SECTION No. 2.
Miss Edith Kelly.....	56,750
Miss Lena Tanner.....	30,000
Miss Fannie Underhill.....	1,500
Miss Lizzie Rogers.....
James A. Duncan.....

It does look to the Recorder that in so far as section No. 2 is concerned its popularity contest could be made to assume more life. The presents it offers are certainly worth an effort to secure, and the friends of the young ladies ought to be more numerous than the returns to date indicate. See what you can do in the next two weeks.

The postal savings system has been established by the Government at the Burlington postoffice and you can now deposit your money with the Postmistress, Miss Olga Kirkpatrick, just the same as a bank, with the faith of the United States solemnly pledged to the payment of the deposits made with accrued interest, as provided in the postal savings act. Accounts may be opened and deposits made by any person of the age of 10 years or over in his or her own name and by a married woman in her own name and free from any interference or control of her husband. Deposits will be accepted only from individuals, and no account will be opened in the name of any incorporation, association or partnership. The service of the postal savings system is free, and strictly confidential—the depositor and postmaster being the only persons possessing the knowledge of the amount deposited, unless revealed by the former. One dollar opens an account, and deposits thereafter must not be less than one dollar nor more than one hundred dollars in a month, nor exceeding five hundred dollars altogether. Interest will be allowed on all deposits at the rate of two per cent per annum computed on each deposit separately, and payable annually. This gives everybody with a dollar to spare an opportunity to begin saving account, and when once started you are certain to keep it up, and before you realize it will be many dollars to your credit.

From the number of boys who have received seed corn it is judged that considerable interest is being taken in the Boone County Corn Club, and it is hoped that each will make a good showing in his work and become so much interested therein that he will be induced to give other branches of farming attention along the same line. The time has come in this part of the country that to make farming a success it must be pursued along scientific lines. The corn farmer ought to prepare himself for his work and be capable of doing his own thinking and making his own scientific tests of his seed and soil. The farmer of the future will have to proceed along lines entirely different from those followed by his forefathers. Conditions have changed and they must be met.

Uncle Sam is advertising for men between 18 and 35 years of age for his army; he says he wants some for musicians, clerks, bakers, teamsters, carpenters, mechanics, etc. It is a very small "home" he wants for these occupations. The vast majority of them he wants to stand up in long ranks to be shot at, if war arises at any time, between the United States and another country. Farm boys are a good material to be used for marks, and the Recorder protests against their going into the army. Stay at home, boys, and help me to run the farm better and more productive.

One day last week E. L. Hogan stabbed and seriously wounded a Miss Vaughn, who refused to marry him. Hogan is 30 and the young lady 15 years of age and both reside near Devon, but in Kenton county.

County Judge Cason is trying to select a tree to have planted on Boone County's plat in the new State House yard at Frankfort. Each county in the State has a plat in the State House yard for that purpose.

County Clerk W. R. Rogers was busy yesterday making a copy of the original plat of the town of Florence for those over there who oppose the putting down of cement side walks.

It seems that Roosevelt got much the best of President Taft in the presidential primary election held in New Jersey yesterday.

Local Happenings.

Considerable preparations are being made for High School Commencement week.

The streets in Burlington will need a light coat of oil this year to keep the dust down.

The Recorder is under obligations to Cudde Maurer for favors rendered last Saturday.

The telephone linemen have been busy out on the Petersburg Pike for two or three weeks.

James Strouse and family married to Bert Rouse's house out on the Florence Pike, last Monday.

Mrs. Elmer Kirkpatrick, out on the Nicholas Carpenter farm, has lost 100 chickens of various breeds.

James Bullock, of Hebron, and Miss Mamie Gordon, daughter of Geo. H. Gordon, were married last Thursday.

It is a pity that a political campaign cannot be conducted in Kentucky without involving the whisky issue.

The poor man's fruit will be scarce this year because of the excessive cold last winter killing nearly all the briars.

It is very seldom that gardeners plant their Irish potatoes and sweet potatoes at the same time, but some of them did that last week.

Edward Farrell, of Lima, is having considerable wire fence constructed along the Burlington and Florence pike. James and John Strouse are the builders.

Don't go squirrel hunting for a few days yet. The crop is not quite ripe, and the slaughter of the frisky little fellows would be a reckless waste.

Those who want value received for their tobacco should take it to Hughes & Wolfe, at Richmond. They will take it and take it through the market for $1.00 per 100 pounds.

A Mr. Kinman, of Sparta, Callisto county, is now in charge of the Cahill hotel property in Florence, having leased the same. Mr. Cahill and family now occupy their residence property in Florence.

It seems that Boone is not the only county in the State that pays annually a large sum of money for road repairs, in which very little progress is made. The road system is not adjusted to suit the conditions.

About 100 Democrats attended the mass convention held at the court house in Burlington, last Saturday afternoon, and the proceedings were decidedly harmonious. The proceedings appear elsewhere in this issue.

Hide and seek has become a very popular evening game with men and boys in Burlington, some of the married men taking a prominent part. One of the latter collided with a tree last Saturday evening and got a badly discolored optic.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Kelly, who went out on the East Bend road gave a dinner, last Sunday, in honor of their son Courtney, who was 17 years old that day. A large number of the young man's relatives and associates were present and enjoyed the occasion.

The Kentucky Automobile & Carriage Co., of Florence, is now operating a passenger car between Florence and the end of the Covington Traction terminus at St. Johns, making three trips daily—morning, noon, and evening. Special trips will be made on Sunday.

The farmers had a chance to get in six full days of work, last week, the first week of that kind this part of the country has experienced this year. Good use was made of the opportunity and considerable land was broken and prepared for being planted in corn, and many fields of corn were planted.

Onnie Rouse sold his fine six year old draft stallion, last week, to Mr. One, of Patriot, Ind., for a long price. Pat Shire is a beautiful black, compactly built, his sire being Old Pat Shire, an imported English Shire, and one of the best sires of draft horses that have a record along that line in this county.

The Florence City Council has decreed that the town shall put down cement sidewalks which in total length will be about two miles, and will cost about $5,000. The work is to commence at once and will be put through as rapidly as possible, and when completed the citizens will be delighted therewith.

The ten bank statements that are published in the Recorder this week show that these institutions have $370,000 on deposit on which they are paying interest, and at the least calculation they have to pay interest to the amount of $17,100 annually. To the amount of interest these banks pay add the amount it costs to operate them and it will be seen that they have to earn in the aggregate nearly $50,000 a year before they can come across with dividends. It is thus seen that the banking, besides being a risky business, is very expensive.

Crouch & Rouse, of Briarage, have sent several truck loads of farm implements through Burlington in the past few weeks. They appear to be doing a good business, their trade extending to nearly every neighborhood in this county, and being equipped with a motor truck they are enabled to make quick delivery of goods sold.

On a postal received from B. Wallace, who is at St. Cloud, Florida, he writes under date of May 24: "Arrived here yesterday and found O. S. Watts and wife well and prospering. It is very warm here. We go to Ft. Myers today. St. Cloud is an old soldiers' town and has grown from one house to 2,500 population in three years, and 6,000 in winter seasons."

Mrs. R. Brant, 11115 St. Parkersburg, W. Va., had an attack of lagrippe which left her bad kidney trouble, and she suffered such severe pain and backache. Then she heard of Foley Kidney Pills and says: "After taking them a short time the pain left my back and I am again able to do my own housework. Foley Kidney Pills helped me wonderfully." For sale at Jones' Drug Store, Walton, Ky.

THE PRODIGAL JUDGE

CHAPTER IX.

The Family on the Raft.

That would unquestionably have been the end of Bob Yancy when he was shot out into the muddy waters of the Elk river, had not Mr. Rich-ard Koppel Cavendish, variously known as Long-Legged Dick, and Chills-and-Fever Cavendish, of Lincoln county, in the state of Tennessee, some months previously and after unprecedented mental effort on his part, decided that Lincoln county was no place for him.

Mr. Cavendish's paternal grandfather had drifted down the Holston and Tennessee; and Mr. Cavendish's father, in his son's youth, had poled up the Elk. Mr. Cavendish now determined to float down the Elk to its juncture with the Tennessee, down the Tennessee to the Ohio, and if need be, down the Ohio to the Mississippi, until he found some spot exactly suited to his taste.

With this end in view he had toiled through the late winter and early spring, building himself a raft on which to transport his few belongings and his numerous family.

Thus it happened that as Murrell and Slosson were dragging Yancy down the lane, Cavendish was just rounding a bend in the Elk, a quarter of a mile distant. Leaning loosely against the long handle of his sweep, he was watching the lane of bright water that ran between the black shadows cast by the trees on either bank.

He heard a dull splash, and caught sight of some object in the eddy that swept alongside. Mr. Cavendish promptly detached himself from the handle of the sweep and ran to the edge of the raft.

It was a face, livid and blood-streaked. Dropping on his knees he reached out a pair of long arms and made a dexterous grab, and his fingers closed on the collar of Yancy's shirt. He drew Yancy close alongside and pulled him clear of the water. Mr. Cavendish began a hurried examination of the still figure. "There's a little life here—not much, Folly!" he called.

This brought Mrs. Cavendish from one of the two cabins that occupied the center of the raft. When she caught sight of Yancy she uttered a shriek.

"Har-ry had aroused the other denizens of the raft. Six little Cavendishes, each draped in a single garment, tumbled forth from their shelter."

"I reckon we oughtn't lift him on to one of the beds—get his wet clothes off and wrap him up warm," said Folly.

"Oh, put him in our bed!" cried all the little Cavendishes.

And Yancy was borne into the smaller of the two shanties, where presently his bandaged head rested on the long pillow. Then his wet clothes were hung up to dry along with the family wash, which fluttered on a rope stretched between the two shanties.

The sheriff had brought the judge's supper. He reported that the doctor was dispersing, and that on the whole public sentiment was not particularly hostile; indeed, he went so far as to say there existed a strong undercurrent of satisfaction that the jail should have so speedily justified itself.

Presently the sheriff went his way into the dusk of the evening, and night came swiftly to fellowship the judge's fears. A single moonbeam found its way into the place, making a thin rift in the darkness. The judge sat down on the three-legged stool, which, with a shake-down bed, furnished the jail.

Where was Solomon Mahaffy, and where Hannibal? He felt that Mahaffy could lead for himself, but he experienced a moment of genuine concern when he thought of the child.

Then—the judge as a scarcely audible rustle on the margin of the woods, a dry branch snapped loudly. Next a stealthy step sounded in the clearing. The judge had an agonized vision of—regulators and lynchers. The cautious steps continued to approach. A whisper stole into the jail.

"Are you awake, Price?" It was Mahaffy who spoke.

"God bless you, Solomon Mahaffy!" cried the judge unsteadily.

"I've got the boy—he's with me," said Mahaffy.

"God bless you both!" repeated the judge brokenly. "Take care of him, Solomon. I feel better now, knowing he's in good hands."

"Please, judge—" it was Hannibal.

"Yes, dear lad?"

"I should like to say that ten dollars I loaned you was bad—but you don't need 'er to pay it back! It was Captain Murrell gave it to me."

"I consecrate myself to his destruction—thief, he gave his companion in misery a costly critical stare, seated himself on the stool, and with quite a steeple air directed all his energy to masturbation. His better nature, however, had not changed his expression, and he and the judge were alone, watching the judge's eye, he noticed what seemed a casual movement with his hand, the three denizens of the jail, the three denizens of the jail, the three denizens of the jail.

Don! Judge Blochin Price cannot be humiliated with impunity!"

"I should think you would—save your wind, Price, until you'd waded out of danger!" Mahaffy spoke gruffly.

"How are you going to get me out of this, Solomon—for I suppose you are here to break jail for me," said the judge.

"Well, Price, I guess all we can do is to go back to town and see if I can get into my cabin—I've got an old saw there. If I can find it, I can come again tomorrow night and cut away one of the logs, or the cleats of the door."

"In heaven's name, do that tonight, Solomon!" implored the judge. "Why procrastinate?"

"Price, there's a pack of dogs in this neighborhood, and we must have a full night to move in, or they'll pull us down before we've gone ten miles!"

"You're right, Solomon; I'd forgotten the dogs!"

Mahaffy closed and fastened the shutters, then he and Hannibal stole across the clearing and entered the woods. The judge went to bed. He was aroused by the arrival of his breakfast, which the sheriff brought about eight o'clock.

"Well, if I was in your boots I couldn't sleep like you!" remarked the official admiringly. "But I reckon, sir, this ain't the first time the penitentiary has stared you in the face."

It was nearing the noon hour when the judge's solitude was again invaded. He first heard the distant murmur of voices on the road and passed an uneasy and restless ten minutes, with his eye to a crack in the door. He was soothed and reassured, however, when at last he caught sight of the sheriff.

"Well, judge, I got company for you," cried the sheriff cheerfully, as he threw open the door. "A horse-thief!"

He pushed into the building a man, hatless and coatless, with a pair of pale villainous eyes and a tobacco-stained chin. The judge viewed the newcomer with disfavor. As for the horse-thief manifested no further interest where he was concerned. He did not even condescend to answer the one or two civil remarks the judge addressed to him.

As the long afternoon wore itself away, the judge lived through the many stages of doubt and uncertainty, for suppose anything had happened to Mahaffy?

Standing before the window, the judge watched the last vestige of light fade from the sky and the stars appear. Would Mahaffy come? The suspense was intolerable. Suddenly out of the silence sounded a long-drawn whistle. Three times it was repeated. The horse-thief leaped to his feet.

"Neighbor, That Means Me!" He Cried.

"Neighbor, that means me!" he cried.

The moon was rising now, and by its light the judge saw a number of horsemen appear on the edge of the woods. They entered the clearing, picking their way among the stumps without haste or confusion. When quite close, five of the band dismounted; the rest continued on about the jail or cantered off toward the road.

"Look out inside, there!" cried a voice, and a log was dashed against the door; once—twice—it rose and fell on the clapboards, and under those mighty thuds grew up a wide gap through which the moonlight streamed splendidly. The horse-thief stepped between the dangling cleats and vanished.

The judge tossed away the stool. He understood now. With a confident, not to say jaunty step, the judge emerged from the jail.

"Your servant, gentlemen!" he said, lifting his hat.

"Gitt!" said one of the men briefly, and the judge moved nimbly away toward the woods.

Now to find Solomon and the boy, and then to put the miles between himself and Pleasantville with all diligence. As he thought this, almost at his elbow Mahaffy and Hannibal rose from behind a tall log. The Yankee motioned for silence and pointed west.

Reading While Lying Down.

To read while lying down is not injurious to the eyes, always provided that the conditions are such as they should be. In the first place, the light should be so arranged as to fall upon that which is being read in such a manner that the print can be easily seen. The position of the body should be such that no strain comes upon the eyes in looking at the book. The trouble occasioned by reading when the light is poor and the print is difficult to see gives rise to eye-strain. The ordinary result of eye-strain is an inflammation of the lids of the eyes themselves. The eyes and the lids, both upper and lower, are lined with a delicate membrane, like a cobweb, which carries tiny blood vessels. In that part of the membrane which covers the eye-ball it is invisible if the eyes are not inflamed. Any tax upon the eyes causes the blood vessels to become enlarged, and the red appearance of the eyes is the result. This is called conjunctivitis. You ask if there is any connection between this habit and a puffy, swollen appearance above the eyes. If you mean that the upper lid of the eyes are swollen, the lower lid which shows it most, and under the eyes becomes swollen and puffy, if, however, you mean just under or above the eye-brows there is a puffiness, it is probably occasioned by some other trouble. Home and Farm.

The State will distribute one hundred thousand young apple trees to the boys clubs on one cent each, each boy growing to plant one hundred trees on one acre of ground.

The people of this State spend $4,000,000 for apples grown in other states. Joining the boys club and plant one hundred trees.

Now is the time to take good care of your young chicks. Keep them thrifty and growing.

Sprinkle lime and ashes upon your garden and you will not be bothered so with insects.

Plant a row of celery, also one of celery and learn how to cultivate these plants.

Dust your hens with insect powder after she has been setting two weeks.

Put forty pounds of potash to each ton of manure and put eight tons to the acre. This will form a well balanced fertilizer.

Plant new beans every week with a little rotted manure for a seed bed.

Sorghum seed are cheap and every farmer should plant at least one-half acre.

Plant your corn and use a drag harrow on it. This will help it to start. Then plow and roll it as soon as it gets six inches high. Plenty of cultivation will help your crop thru a drought.

Resumed Operations.

Frankfort, May 22.—Night riders have resumed operations in Western Kentucky, scraping plant beds in Lyon and Trigg counties. The first outbreak of this kind was in Lyon county, but recently plant beds have been scraped in Trigg county. Gov. McCreary to-day offered a reward of $400 for the arrest and conviction of the unknown persons who scraped the beds in Trigg county. This reward will be paid for each person convicted. It is stated that the plant beds that have been scraped belong to men who were associated with the tobacco organization in the past and who were leaders in the movement to hold the tobacco growers together. Maj. E. E. Bassett, of Hopkinsville, who was Acting Adjutant General for a time, and who was in command of soldiers in the so-called night rider district, is now in Frankfort. He says that there have been more cases of plant-bed scraping than have been reported in the papers, and that the old night rider trouble seems to be in danger of breaking out afresh.

John R. Staton, Joyce, Ky., had an exceptionally severe attack of rheumatism. He says: "If it had not been for Foley's Kidney and Urinary Compound I would have been compelled to quit work. Instead, I never missed a day, and Foley's gave me instant relief and is the only cure medicine we ever use." Contains no opiates. For sale at Jones' Drug Store, Walton, Ky.

A small per cent of the corn crop went into the ground in this county last week. Much of the corn ground broken last week was too wet.

FISH KNOW HOW TO REASON A French Scientist Gives In- stances To Prove His Point.

M. OXNER, one of the leading European authorities on water lice, recently presented to the French Academy of Sciences a paper in which he laid down the theory that fish can reason, and he cited numerous instances to prove his case.
The authorities at different aquariums have corroborated his conclusions with experiences of their own. When the daily feeding time approaches the fish in an aquarium will show that they know it's time for their dinner.
And they also show that they know and can recognize the person who feeds them, even at some distance away, for they will pay no heed to a stranger, but will rise to the surface and display their joy and expectancy when their master appears with their feed.
It is well known that fish become easily frightened and that it takes them a long time to overcome their shyness—thus showing that they have a long memory. They can be made so tame that they will allow themselves to be handled, but not by strangers. When removed from a tank to a pond and then returned to the tank after several months they show that they feed at home in their old haunts, but indicating that they can remember fish that have once been nearly caught, but have escaped, are very wary for a long time afterward; in fact, they show more wisdom in this than many human beings do. The same walk repeatedly into the same trap just as if they had no power of reason or memory at all.
Mr. Oxner concludes that if people can claim to have reasoning powers, then fish can be credited with them also.

FOR A LONG LIFE
Those Interested, Please Read
Fresh air and exercise, with proper food and a sufficient amount of sleep, are the essentials.
Under such a regime of living, germs cannot develop, and many diseases are prevented.
Should the system require a tonic, take only such as you know their ingredients—such as Vinol, which is a delicious combination of the health-giving properties of the cod liver with all the useless grease eliminated and tonic from added, happily blended in a mild, medicinal wine.
For this reason Vinol is regarded as one of the greatest body builders and invigorants for aged people. It invigorates and builds them up, and keeps them up.
We sell Vinol with the understanding that if it does not give satisfaction the price will be returned.

Barlow and Mrs. Emma Robbins request me to say that they are very thankful to those who kindly assisted while their father, Uncle Noah Barlow, lay a corpse. Rev. E. R. Wagner, of Cincinnati, will conduct communion services at Hopefield next Sunday at 2:30 p. m. Immediately after the service there will be an election for a pastor. A suitable program will be rendered and all are cordially invited. Rev. Riley occupied the pulpit at the Christian Church Sunday. He delivered two excellent sermons, the subject in the morning being "The Call to Service." The subject for the evening discourse was "Prompt Obedience." A large congregation attended both services. One addition Sunday evening.

RICHWOOD.

Mrs. Mary Fennell is quite ill. Mrs. Lucy Carpenter is still very ill. Cherries are ripe and birds and kids are feasting. John Tveit has a position with the B. & O. Railway. Our roads are beautiful now-days and will be so until next fall. Cove Carpenter and family of Devon, were Sunday guests of Ben Cleek. Those present were Misses Nell Snow, Bertha Newman, Agnes and Cecil Snow, Lorraine Goss, Gladys Carpenter, Mr. Cummins, of Louisville, was the guest of honor.

GRANT R. D. No. 1.

The river is getting low again. Miss Lulu Sullivan was the guest of friends here Sunday. Harry Bachelor has his burro trained now to bring in the Belvoir cows without his help. Several acres of tobacco were set here last week. James Beard, of East Bend, set three acres. Mrs. Lou Kelly and little daughter, who were quite sick several days last week, are some better. Israel Flick went to Aurora, Sunday, in his gasoline launch. Spauld Smith has his boat on the bank for repairs. John Maurer returned from Memphis, Thursday, and left for Covington Sunday to bring down Menke & Coleman's floating opera, which shows at Rising Sun June 4th.

Misses Maggie and Lula Kelly returned Sunday from several days' visit with Carl Kelly and family. Carl Kelly came down with them for a short visit. Caddy Maurer and family spent Sunday with Ken Scott and mother. Mrs. Maurer and family arrived at their destination rather late as they drove the rural carriers horse, and Caddy says he had to stop at every mail box on the road.

A P. O. Inspector visited our office here and found everything in apple pie order and complimented the P. M. and rural carrier on the way they had been looking after Uncle Sam's interests. He and the postmaster took dinner with the writer. The Bellevue ball club lost a game at Petersburg Saturday. Up to the 8th inning the score stood 8 to 3 in our favor but in the ninth the Petersburg team scored six runs on only seven errors and won out 9 to 8. The strong Aurora's play here Saturday. This will be a stinger. Come out everyone.

Orville Rice and sister, Neva, celebrated their birthday anniversary Sunday. The following guests were present and enjoyed the day: Misses Isabella Walton, Daisy Riley, Clara Rice, Allie Clure, Imel Cook, Pauline Berkshire, Messrs. Emmet Williamson, Robert Henaley, Eliza Scott, Willard Clure, Bernard Seebree, Frank W. Walter, Leslie Seebree. A very pretty home wedding was consummated here Saturday evening at six o'clock, when Miss Clara Rice and Mr. Leslie Seebree of Woolper, were united in marriage by Rev. Hensley. The bride was attired in pure white moiderly and carried a bouquet of ferns and rosebuds presented by loving friends, while the groom looked resplendent in the conventional black. The attendants were the bride's sister, Miss Neva, and the groom's brother, Bernard Seebree. After the ceremony a supper consisting of all the delicacies of the season was served to the assembled guests. At about 8:30 the town turned out and gave the newly married couple an old time charivari. The boys were treated to cigars and the ladies were invited to strawberries and cream. The guests departed at about midnight, wishing the bride and groom many years of happiness and they received many useful presents.

NORTH BEND.

Harry Seamond is the guest of his parents at this place. W. S. Acre spent Sunday on Woolper with his brother. Steve Burns, Ora Ogden and Towell Nettles have set tobacco. Buddie Cropper and wife and son, Lucy, spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Aoe Graves. Mrs. Laura Nettles is the guest of her father and mother, helping to wait on her sick sister. Mr. and Mrs. Aoe Graves entertained friends from the city Sunday and their children are with them for a while. Mrs. Steve Burns, Mrs. Cecil Burns and children and Miss Maggie Snelling spent Thursday of last week in Petersburg.

PLATTSBURG.

There is yet considerable corn to be planted. G. S. Stephens was the first in this neighborhood to harvest his alfalfa hay. Ray Botts finished setting his crop of about five acres of tobacco last Friday. Chas. Finn sold a considerable bunch of hogs, last week, to Bork, of Lawrenceburg. Maggie Huston, of Idelwild, and Pat Norman, of Union, were calling on Ed. Botts, Sunday. A party of Petersburgers spent last Saturday at Woolper tempting the appetites of the little fishes. G. S. Walrath made the first trip with his huckster wagon last week. He will be around every Tuesday. Crows have taken up about two acres of corn so badly for Gaines Bros., that they had to plant it again. Since Leslie Seebree has deserted the old bachelors club Ed. Seebree and Jim Aylor have become considerably discouraged, and declare that while there is life there is hope.

The break in the Woolper road above Chas. Finn's has become almost impassable. Several hundred dollars have been thrown away at that point in the last few years, and the road gets worse every year. There is but one remedy—put the road some where else. Leslie Seebree, for a long time considered one of our most hopeful little bachelors has taken unto himself a blushing June bride. He and Miss Clara Rice, daughter of Spauld Smith, were quietly married at the residence of Rev. Hensley Saturday at 6 p. m. They begin their journey down the beautiful stream with the best wishes everybody in this neighborhood.

UNION.

Mrs. Will Wilson, who has been seriously ill for some time is reported better. Many gardens have been planted recently and the ones planted early look fine. Mrs. J. W. Kennedy has been suffering from rheumatism most all winter and spring. Lucien Dickerson was quite sick several days recently—never knew him to be sick before. John Dickerson, of Lowers, of Verona, were guests of J. W. Conner and family Sunday. Geo. Stevenson and son have finished painting the residence and store of Frank Smith. Dr. Seniors keeps very busy these days, but never seems to tire of doing lots of work. John Dickerson beautified and improved the residence of T. A. Huey with a thorough painting. The residence of J. W. Conner has undergone a thorough repainting. Mr. and Mrs. Conner are well pleased and that's enough. Lucien Love was taken to Louisville by Senator to be treated by a specialist this week. Lucien has been sick for quite a while.

Dr. and Mrs. Crouch are expecting to have a new stairway built in their residence and figure on it being a very great improvement. The writer was kindly entertained at the homes of B. L. Rice, Anne Gadd and Uncle John Crisler, Saturday evening and Sunday. It is a rare thing to see an "angel" driving a two horse wagon or any other kind of wagon for that matter, but the writer saw just such a sight recently.

GASBURG.

Clouds, clouds, clouds galore. Plenty of potato bugs but, no cut worms. Frank Berkshire set 4 acres of tomatoes last week. John Botts is doing some carpenter work for Ernest Grant. The corn crop is about all planted under unfavorable conditions. This writer sold 2 cows, three calves and eight hogs to various persons last week. Mr. Eobrink from Lawrenceburg was buying hogs in this vicinity the latter part of last week. The corn crop of Hitzfield and son and Miss Leslie Parker, of Home City, Ohio, visited relatives here Saturday and Sunday. There will be a strawberry supper at the Bullittsville hall next Saturday night. Admission 15 cents. All are invited. The Burlington High School team defeated Erlanger, last Tuesday at Erlanger, by a score of 8 to 6.

WALTON.

Mrs. J. W. Thomas spent Saturday in Cincinnati with friends. J. G. Huffman and bride of Covington, were visited by her. Monday, coming through in their automobile from a tour of Central Kentucky. Mrs. Huffman was formerly Miss Anna Huffman, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John C. Byland, who recently resided in Walton. Mr. Huffman is a son of the late Dr. Huffman, of Covington. The young couple were married at Covington several weeks ago and are enjoying their honeymoon in beautiful scenic Kentucky. Mrs. John Snyder, of Crittenden, aged 60 years, died suddenly here last Thursday of acute Bright's disease at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Bettie Smith. She had been very ill of complications incident to old age and Mrs. Snyder came to visit her, being apparently, in the best of health. She was met at the residence by her brother Wm. Brittenheim, with his auto and taken to the mother's, and in step into the door she became suddenly very ill and after a short time lapsed into unconsciousness from which she never rallied, dying about noon that day. It was an awful shock to her relatives. Mrs. Snyder leaves a husband and nine children, besides many other relatives. She was a member of the Christian church, and had many warm friends in Walton. The remains were taken to Crittenden where the funeral took place last Sunday.

Northcutt, of the Waterloo neighborhood, graduated from the Louisville Medical College last Thursday. Mrs. Wm. Crisler, of Louisville; Mrs. Benj. Crisler, of Petersburg; and Mrs. Lloyd McGlasson, of Taylorsport, are guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Brady.

Edgar C. Riley, Supt.

We have now approached near enough to the Republican national convention to forecast the action of that body. Ex-President Roosevelt will, apparently, have a majority of the northern states while President Taft seems likely to have a majority of the southern—including the south-eastern delegates who represent merely patronage and boot-

Mr. Roosevelt has been careful to arrange for contesting delegates from the south—this was the first indication of his intention to bait. With a majority of the northern delegates he is in position to have a convention of his own in case his contesting delegates are refused admission.

The confusion, therefore, is that Mr. Roosevelt will be the nominee of the regular convention or the nominee of a boiling convention. Get ready for his candidacy—he is quite sure to run.

Can Roosevelt be defeated? Yes, by any good progressive. A progressive will hold the Democratic vote and the Republicans who oppose a third term will do the rest. Mr. Clark and Mr. Wilson are the leading progressive candidates—either one of them can defeat Roosevelt. The country will never have a president for a third term.—W. J. Bryan's Comment.

In regard to the bi-monthly stock sales as suggested by the Recorder Supt. Edgar C. Riley says if the farmers desire to conduct a sale of stock at Burlington every two weeks, the stalls at the school house barn are at their service for putting their stock in, and that the sales can be conducted there during the summer vacation. The sales could be made without cost to the farmers other than the auctioneer's fees which would be small. Now all those who endorse this scheme and will list their stock when they have any for sale will please notify the RECORDER and the date for a sale will be announced as soon as practical. Remember it will cost you nothing to advertise your stock in this paper.

While so much is being said about Senator-elect Ollie M. James putting Kentucky in line for Speaker Clark, it is well enough to ask who put Mr. James in line for Clark? Mr. James was non-committal as to his choice of the candidates until he visited Hon. W. J. Bryan at his home in Nebraska, where he returned and declared for Clark. It looks like Mr. Bryan is entitled to a share of the credit for swinging Kentucky.

The Republicans are in a quarrelsome mood this year, the last and most recent fuss being over the national committee's refusal to issue to Mr. Roosevelt tickets of admission to the national convention. He made a requisition for 200 tickets but it was turned down.

Lost—Last Saturday afternoon on road between Owen McMullens and Gunpowder creek a three bladed knife, one blade has round point. Finder will please return to Lewis Clure, near Grange Hall.

FOR SALE—Jersey cow and calf. Apply to W. H. Clements, near Hathaway.

DE LAVAL CREAM SEPARATOR

More Than 1,375,000 Are in Use.

The Best Investment Any Cow Owner Can Make

That's what nearly a million and a half of cow owners the world over have found the De Laval cream separator to be.

A De Laval farm separator costs from $35 to $160—according to capacity. It saves butter fat and produces a cream of superior quality over any setting system or any other separator every time it is used—twice a day—730 times a year.

It involves far less labor than any setting system, and runs easier, has greater capacity and lasts from two to ten times longer than any other separator.

That's how a "De Laval separator saves at least its cost the first year, and frequently in a few months, and then goes right along saving your money year after year.

We have an arrangement whereby you can make a partial payment at time of purchase, and pay the balance on such liberal terms that your machine will more than save its cost while you are paying for it.

SOONER OR LATER YOU WILL BUY A DE LAVAL

than any other make of the same size

- 1—A TROY is bigger at the mouth than any other wagon. Look at the points marked "A". Then figure for yourself where the biggest strain comes. It's at the mouth of the skids.
- 2—A TROY 3 in. skids really measures 3 1/2 in. at the collar. See point marked "B". That makes the TROY a full size larger all the way through—axles, wheels, etc. Don't you want that added margin of safety?
- 3—The skids are oval, not round. See "A" again. Therefore they take in the full strength of the axle—just where the strength is needed most.
- 4—TROY axles are strictly clear, first-quality hickory. No other timber has the same carrying strength or resiliency.

This is just an axle and skids talk. These things count—but they aren't all. We want you to know the TROY all over—from tongue to tail-board. Come in and let us show you why the TROY is the one best from every angle. You will like the price too—it's right.

FLAG DAY

June 14 To Be Observed As Flag Day Throughout The United States.

June 14 will be the 135th anniversary of the adoption of the stars and stripes as the flag of our country. The public recognition of Flag Day as a National anniversary is each year becoming more and more general.

The governors of many states and the mayors of many cities have in the past called public attention to the day either by formal proclamation or otherwise and have ordered the flag to be displayed on all public buildings having their fellow citizens to do the same upon their private buildings.

The American people from year to year with a growing enthusiasm have celebrated the day. All American citizens are again earnestly invited to join in the public recognition of the birthday of the emblem of our nationality.

Teach the story of the flag and what it represents to the young people of our land that they may have the intelligent desire to pledge their fealty and loyalty to it. Since the struggle of 1861-65 the flag has become the symbol of a mighty nation. It has been carried to the utmost parts of the earth, carrying liberty wherever it has been thrown to the breeze.

The stars and stripes within the recent past have come to possess new beauty for friendly eyes and new terror for the foes of liberty.—Ex.

KENTUCKY NEWS.

Baxton Ramsey, Clyde Woodruff and Ruby Thomas, rural mail carriers on Routes 2 and 4, have purchased motor cycles and will abandon the horse and buggy plan for the much faster one, the motorcycle. Carrier Woodruff was the first to go out on his new machine, making the round trip in two and one-half hours. —Dawson Springs Tribune.

If you are out in the country and hear a tremendous explosion, do not get alarmed and assume the night riders have returned and are indulging in their nefarious pursuits in broad daylight. Of course, he is not exactly plowing with dynamite, but he is breaking up the ground for cultivation by means of it. It's a new idea in agriculture, and where it has been tried it has proven very successful, in competition with the old method. —Paducah Sun.

Dr. A. G. Browning, of this city, is the possessor of a fine solid gold case and dial watch that is at least 135 years old, and very likely much more ancient. It was made in England, and the workmanship must have been of the highest order, since the watch has been in continual use for much over a century and a quarter, and is still a reliable timepiece. Dr. Browning is the great-grandfather, John Hart, had the watch on his person when he signed the Declaration of Independence. —Mayville Bulletin.

W. P. Givens, of the Shelby City section, who is one of the pioneer alfalfa growers in this part of the State, will increase his acreage this season from three to twenty acres. Mr. Givens figures that his alfalfa paid him last year easily $100 an acre and his three acres were just beginning to get a good growth. Alfalfa does not begin to do itself justice until it is five years old, and last year was the fourth that Mr. Givens had had it in. Mr. Givens cut his little patch of three acres five times last year and says that each cutting yielded a minimum of a ton and a half of hay. —Danville Advocate.

Death House Is Crowded.

Thirteen men now occupy the death house at the Eddyville penitentiary awaiting ends in the electric chair, says the Hopkinsville New Era. This is said to be the largest number of men ever under sentence of death at one time in Kentucky. Those who make a study of such things say that one reason there has been more tendency of late to impose the death penalty is that the execution takes place at Eddyville and not where the crime occurred.

Death sentences in this state were rare prior to the passage of the electrocution bill and the establishment of the death chair at Eddyville. Now it is common for a jury to find a man guilty and fix his punishment at death. Several men have already been put to death in the electric chair, and now there are thirteen more to be killed by the electric current. Where the condemned man was hanged, the execution took place in the county where the crime was committed, and the local sheriff had to spring the trap. Many sheriffs objected vigorously to presiding at an execution, and used their influence to prevent the return of a death penalty, or, if the death penalty was returned, were active in trying to secure a commutation of the death sentence.

Nobody can get on the band wagon quicker than Senator-elect Ollie M. James, as demonstrated at the Louisville convention last week.

The Republican national committee which will meet in Chicago in the next few days will find a lot of work to do, and will, doubtless settle the question as to who will win the nomination in the national convention.

The repeated defeat of those who can see no other than the temperance or whisky issue in Kentucky politics, ought to begin to teach them that the people are tired of their continually dragging that question into every contest.

The Latonia race track people tried to work the country press last week for advertising under the guise of news matter. These people have been so liberal with the rural press that its columns ought to be thrown up to them in a horn.

Let every farmer put in as large a corn crop as he can and give it all the attention possible. With a very short wheat crop now certain corn must bear a good price; it is high now and cannot be expected to fall much; so make as much of it as you possibly can.

Ollie James did the unprecedented in the Louisville Democratic convention on Wednesday of last week—put himself in nomination for temporary chairman. He wanted the one he considers the ablest man in the State to perform that stunt, therefore he did it himself.

The political convention has had its day in Kentucky, and hereafter both parties will have to nominate their candidates for offices at the primary election held and paid for by the State. The only way to defeat the will of the voters hereafter will be by theft for which the guilty parties will be entitled to a term in the penitentiary.

Speaker Clark was a little hasty in congratulating Ollie James and the Courier-Journal for the magnificent victory they gained for him in Kentucky. After seeing how Mr. James and the Courier-Journal were "set down upon and flattened out" by the State convention perhaps Mr. Clark has changed his mind as to their power in Kentucky politics.

The attention Ollie James placing his own name before the convention as a candidate for temporary chairman is said to have been the greatest effort of his life. Ollie is some orator and the first district is justly proud of him. It seems to be a finish fight all along the line.—Foulton Leader.

And the greatest effort of his life failed to bring any results.

Ollie James declared in his speech nominating himself for temporary chairman of the Louisville convention, that he had not fought the administration. But everybody knows he stood silently by hoping to be benefitted by the pusillanimous attack others were making upon the administration, therefore he was guilty as an accessory if in no other way.

In the Scott county Democratic convention Congressman Cantrell and his crowd defeated every proposition that was favorable to Gov. McCreary, going so far as to ignore his administration and then had the gall to "respectfully" petition the Governor to appoint Emmett Dixon Circuit Judge in that district. That convention proceeded on the platform "ask and you shall receive."

Colts should be petted and handled from time of birth, should be haltered, its feet should be lifted and examined and other minor things which the good colt raiser is sure to notice. These few little things, however small they may seem, mean much in after years when you will have a nice, gentle work horse, one that can be depended upon largely from the fact that it was handled with care while young.

Those who were fighting Gov. McCreary hoped to win because of Beckham and Haley's unpopularity and Ollie James' popularity, but were disappointed because of Henry Watterson's unpopularity offsetting that of Beckham and Haley, while McCreary's popularity far exceeded that of Ollie James. Abuse and vituperation availed the Louisville gang nothing and it got exactly what it deserved, and Ollie James has now taught a valuable lesson.

The estimated output of Automobiles for 1912 is 225,000. Of this number 75,000 will be Fords. Why so many Fords? S. LONG, Florence, Ky., Agt. for Boone County.

The average Kentucky civil war soldier will receive an increase of $61 a year, or a little more than $5 a month, under the new pension law. This estimate is based on official figures by the Pension Bureau.

Application for pension increases under the new law are pouring in on Congress. Under a ruling of the Pension Bureau applications will be considered in the order of filing, on the principle of "first come, first served," but when pensions are granted the increased amounts will date from the filing of the applications.

The new law prohibits attorney fees, and the members of Congress have sent out letters to their old soldiers constituents volunteering to act in lieu of attorneys in presenting their cases at the Pension Bureau. Applications must be made on a printed form, copies of which are being sent out by the members of Congress by the thousands.

It is just now hard to tell with what propositions the Democrats are going to be confronted with when they meet in convention in Baltimore the latter part of this month. A great many believe that the lines are being laid for the nomination of Mr. Bryan, who has never indicated that the nomination will not be acceptable.

The last two weeks of the month of May were very favorable to the farmers and made up somewhat for the time they had lost on account of the long period of rain. Flooding and planting were ruined and by the end of June the farmers will scarcely realize that they were so badly balked up with work during the first half of the last month.

Neither of the base ball teams advertised to cross bats with the Burlington High School team last Thursday afternoon put in appearance, but a nine was gotten together that gave the school team a close game which was saved by a battling rally in the ninth, the score being 13 to 12 in favor of the school boys.

Mr. Stephenson who was a candidate for the chairmanship of the Democratic State Committee was never heard of politically until he concluded that Olio M. James, J. C. Cantrell and the Courier-Journal could put him over, but he is not likely to be heard of again.

It begins to look like this country is going out of business. A shortage all along the line is reported and given as the cause of an increasing in prices on all the necessities of life. In things provided by nature there is claimed to be a shortage—in coal, for instance.

From the quantity of soft drinks a Cincinnati firm is sending to Burlington in its big truck, this is not very terrible by any means in that respect. All three stores handle soft drinks in large quantities.

One day last week one person, who fished in Rev. Burlington's pond near Florence, caught eighteen bass that weighed in the aggregate 30 pounds, one of them weighing nine and one-fourth pounds.

Jesse Eddins purchased a two horse corn planter from Crouch & House, of Erlanger, which means he cut out some of the time lost on account of the continued wet weather this spring.

Several of the Masonic brethren of Hebron lodge came over last Saturday night, and assisted Burlington lodge confer the Master Mason's degree. The Hebron boys constitute a tip-top team.

A postoffice inspector arrived one day last week and gave Miss Olga Kirkpatrick instructions as how to operate the postal savings bank, which began business here last Saturday.

What has become of the Covington, Big Bone and Carrollton traction road? The last reports in regard thereto were very flattering, but have not panned out.

Gov. Harmon, of Ohio, has not enough instructed delegates to entitle him to a pass into the convention hall at Baltimore, but yet he may be the nominee.

Several of the citizens of the town of Florence are engaged constructing cement sidewalks, which will improve the looks of the town wonderfully.

The time may come when Uncle Sam will have more than his hands full looking after the private interests of American citizens in foreign countries.

J. W. DeHart, of Louisville, (State Deputy of Modern Woodmen of America, will speak at Burlington, Wednesday, June 12th. The public invited.

Decoration day was more generally observed in Burlington this year than at any time in the past. The stores only were open most of the day.

The pupils of Burlington High School were diligent in their preparation for the commencement exercises.

The fine rains that visited this locality last week were very timely and put the ground, which was getting hard, in fine condition to work.

Quite a number of Erlanger young people spent last Thursday down on Gunpowder creek, where they had a delightful day.

BOONE HIGH SCHOOL

Commencement Exercises Carried Out Pleasantly and Profitably

Seven Students Graduate From The High School In 1912.

The closing exercises of the Boone County High School began on Saturday evening and the final event was Tuesday evening, June 11th. All the exercises were well attended and a gratifying interest manifested by everybody. We believe that as this becomes an established annual event the interest on the part of the public will continue to increase.

The plays given on Saturday evening were very creditably presented exhibiting talent on the part of the students participating and eliciting praise from those in attendance.

The baccalaureate sermon preached by the Rev. H. C. Wayman on Sunday morning, was highly appropriate and an inspiration not only to the students but to all who were present.

Class exercises on Monday evening were in charge of the graduating class. This was the first exercise of the kind ever held at Burlington. Each member of the class read a address or a paper presenting the history, the hopes, the dark prospects and the brilliant ones of the class of 1912.

The class of 1912 consists of Mary Uta, Wilbur Kelly, Robert Gaines, Alice Carver, Ruth Kelly, John Northcutt, Marietta Stephenson. This class graduated the third year of the school. The address is a credit to the institution both in size and in preparation. This class, with Howard Huey who graduated last year, will form an Alumni Association which should be a power for the further building up of the school. The growth of the school in numbers as well as in other ways has been phenomenal. The number of students the first year was ten, the second, year thirty, and the third year, forty-two.

At least fifty enrolled at the next session.

ANNUAL MEETING

Held With Christian Church At Petersburg.

The 7th annual district convention met at Petersburg, May 28th and 29th. There was a good sized attendance, over sixty nine delegates being present. The addresses were practical and inspiring and all felt that it was "good to be there."

Bro. W. L. Glazier, president of the convention, followed with the President's address. He compared the inefficiency of the present schools of the past with the success of it today and predicted even greater success in the future.

After the regular business session in the afternoon Bro. J. W. Harding, of Transylvania University, spoke on "The Crisis Among the Disciples." It was a great plea for more workers in the ministry and mission field. Truly the harvest is white and the laborers few.

Mrs. W. W. Wetzel, of Covington, followed with two beautiful recitations, "A Prayer" and "In Answer." The convention adjourned to meet next year at Madison Avenue church in Covington.

All left impressed with the cordial treatment and hospitality expressed by the people of Petersburg and with a vision of a greater service in the Master's Kingdom.

CHAPTER X.

Belle Plain.

"Now, Tom," said Betty, with a little air of excitement as she rose from the breakfast table that first morning at Belle Plain. "I want you to show me everything!"

"I reckon 'you'll notice some changes," remarked Tom.

He went from the room and down the hall a step or two in advance of her. On the wide porch Betty paused, breathing deep. The house stood on an eminence; directly before it at the bottom of the slight descent was a small bayou, beyond this the forest stretched away in one unbroken mass to the Mississippi.

"What is it you want to see, anyhow, Betty?" Tom demanded.

"Everything—the place, Tom—Belle Plain! Oh, isn't it beautiful! I had no idea how lovely it was!" cried Betty, as with her eyes still fixed on the distant panorama of wood and water she went down the steps, him at her heels—he bet she'd get sick of it all soon enough, that was one comfort!

"Why, Tom! Why does the lawn look like this?"

"Like what?" inquired Tom.

"Why, this—all weeds and briars, and the paths overgrown!"

Mr. Ware rubbed his chin reflectively with the back of his hand.

"That sort of thing looked all right, Bet," he said, "but it kept five or six of the best hands out of the fields right at the busiest time of the year."

"Haven't I slaves enough?" she asked.

The dull color crept into Ware's cheeks. He hated her for that "I!" So she was going to come that on him, was she?

"Don't you want to see the crops, Bet?"

The girl shook her head and moved swiftly down the path that led from the terrace to the margin of the bayou. At the first terrace she paused.

"It's positively squalid!" cried Betty, with a little stamp of her foot.

Ware glanced about with dull eyes.

"I'll tell you, Betty, I'm busy this morning; you poke about and see what you want done and we'll do it," he said, and made a hasty retreat to his office.

Betty returned to the porch and seating herself on the top step, and with her elbows on her knees and her chin sunk in the palms of her hands, gazed about her miserably enough. She was still there when half an hour later

Charley Norton came—on the drive from the highroad. Catching sight of her on the porch, he sprang from the saddle, and, throwing his reins to a black boy, hurried to her side.

"Inspecting your domain, Betty?" he asked, as he took his place near her on the step.

"Why didn't you tell me, Charley—or at least prepare me for this?" she asked, almost tearfully.

"How was I to know, Betty? I haven't been here since you went away, dear—what was there to bring me?" Old Tom would make a cow pasture out of the Garden. "When wouldn't he—a beautiful, practical, sordid soul he is!"

Norton spent the day at Belle Plain; and though he was there on his good behavior as the result of an agreement they had reached on board the Nalad, he proposed twice.

Tom was mistaken in his supposition that Betty would soon tire of Belle Plain. She demanded men, and teams, and began on the lawns. This interested and fascinated her. She was out at sun-up to direct her laborers. She had the advantage of Charley Norton's presence and advice for the greater part of each day in the week, and Sundays he came to look over what had been accomplished, and as Tom firmly believed, to put that little foot up to fresh nonsense. He could have booted him!

As the grounds took shape before her delighted eyes, Betty found leisure to institute a thorough reformation indoors. A number of house servants were rescued from the quarters and she began to instruct them in their new duties.

Betty's sphere of influence extended itself. She soon began to have her doubts concerning the treatment accorded the slaves, and was not long in discovering that Hicks, the overseer, ran things with a heavy hand.

Matters reached a crisis one day when, happening to ride through the quarters, she found him disciplining a refractory black. She turned sick at the sight. Here was a slave struck while Hicks stood looking on with his hands in his pockets, and with a brutal, satisfied air.

"Stop!" commanded Betty, her eyes blazing. She strove to keep her voice steady. "You shall not remain at Belle Plain another hour."

Hicks said nothing. He knew it would take more than her saying so to get him off the place. Betty turned her horse and galloped back to the house. She felt that she was in no condition to see Tom just at that moment, and dismounting at the door, ran upstairs to her room.

Meantime the overseer sought out Ware in his office. His manner of making his grievance was singular. He began by swearing at his employer. He had been insulted before all the quarter—his rage fairly choked him; he could not speak.

Tom seized the opportunity to swear back.

"Sent you off the place, did she; well, you'll have to see 'bout it. I'll do all I can. I don't know what girls were ever made for anyhow, damn it if I do!" he added.

Hicks consented to eat crow only after Mr. Ware had cursed and cajoled him into a better and more forgiving frame of mind.

Later, after Hicks had made his apology, the two men smoked a friendly pipe and discussed the situation. Tom pointed out that opposition was useless, a losing game; you could get your way by less direct means. She wouldn't stay long at Belle Plain, but while she did remain they must avoid any more crises of the sort through which they had just passed, and presently she'd be sick of the place.

In the midst of her activities Betty occasionally found time to think of Bruce Carrington. She was sure she did not wish to see him again! But when three weeks had passed she began to feel incensed that he had not appeared. She thought of him with hot cheeks and a quickening of the heart. It was anger.

Then one day when she had decided forever to banish all memory of him from her mind, he presented himself at Belle Plain.

She was in her room just putting the finishing touches to an especially satisfying toilet when her maid tapped on the door and told her there was a gentleman in the parlor who wished to see her.

"Is it Mr. Norton?" asked Betty.

"No, Miss—he didn't give no name, Miss."

When Betty entered the parlor a moment later she saw her caller standing with his back turned toward her as he gazed from one of the windows, but she instantly recognized those broad shoulders, and the fine poise of his head that surmounted them.

"Oh, Mr. Carrington—" and Betty stopped short, while her face grew rather pale and then crimsoned. Then she advanced boldly and held out a frigid hand. "I didn't know—so you are alive—you disappeared so suddenly that night—"

"Yes, I'm alive," he said, and then with a smile, "but I fear before you get through with me we'll both wish I were not, Betty."

"Do you still hate me, Betty—Miss Malroy—is there anything I can say or do that will make you forgive me?" He looked at her penitently.

But Betty hardened her heart against him and prepared to keep him in place.

"Will you sit down?" she indicated a chair. He seated himself and Betty put a safe distance between them.

"Are you staying in the neighborhood, Mr. Carrington?" she asked, rather unkindly.

"No, I'm not staying in the neighborhood. When I left you, I made up my mind I'd wait at New Madrid until I could come on down here and say I was sorry."

"And it's taken you all this time?" Carrington regarded her seriously.

"I reckon I must have come a little more time, Betty—Miss Malroy. In spite of herself, Betty glowed under the caressing humor of his tone.

"Really—you must have chosen poorly then when you selected New Madrid. It couldn't have been a good place for your purpose."

"I think if I could have made up my mind to stay there long enough, it would have answered," said Carrington. "But when a down-river boat tied up there yesterday it was more than I could stand. You see there's danger in a town like New Madrid or getting too sorry. I thought we'd better discuss this point—"

"Mayn't I show you Belle Plain?" asked Betty quickly.

But Carrington shook his head.

"I don't care anything about that," he said. "I didn't come here to see Belle Plain."

"Then you expect to remain in the neighborhood?"

"I've given up the river, and I'm going to get hold of some land."

"Land?" said Betty, with a rising inflection.

"Yes, land."

"I thought you were a river-man?"

"I'm a river-man no longer. I am going to be a planter now. But I'll tell you why, and all about it some other day." Then he held out his hand. "Good-by," he added.

"Are you going?" asked Mr. Carrington, and Betty's finger tingled with his masterful clasp, long after he had gone.

CALIFORNIA LETTER

Kentucky Well Represented In The Golden State.

Our corner of Kentucky is getting pretty well represented here in the Golden State and of those who have friends here and those who are thinking of coming some time, a few facts may be read with interest, and it is only fair that the Recorder's readers know something of the varied places to which that good paper goes its way and its welcome each week.

The towns of Southern California is each distinctive in its own peculiar way. There is little similarity; there is a different reason for the building up of each.

I am, naturally, most interested in Long Beach, but it is a town worthy of interest. Its growth has been and is marvelous. In a few years it has built up from a very small village to a city of 30,000 inhabitants according to the census, and at all seasons of the year many tourists who come and go.

The surf is best of any of the coast towns, having 14 miles of beach from which it gets its name. The strand is wide and out of the main part of the town there is a perpendicular cut from 25 to 30 feet high, but down in the main streets this has been cut down and concrete driveways and steps constructed. There are innumerable splendid apartment houses and hotels, largest of which, the Virginia, has about 600 rooms.

All plans are made for the erection of another immense hotel. American and two or three foot stories will be built in the bank below the level of the street and eight above, making 10 stories face the ocean.

There was almost no rain here from March, 1911. The winter months were the acme of pretty weather. Farmers, fruit growers and dairymen began to despair, but March again brought rain in plenty and snow for the mountains, the melting of which affords water for the irrigation canals.

The mountains are a grand picture as they loom up white with snow and make quite a contrast as seen from here in the midst of fruit and flowers.

It rained heavily for the most part of six weeks; there was one terrific wind and rain storm which swept away part of the pier which extended 1,800 feet out into the water.

The breakers dashed and foamed during one day and night and near the break water went as high as 60 feet.

The sun has come back to its own now, but Trade Winds blow during April and May so real summer does not begin until they are over.

Vegetables and flowers are in season all the time. I saw one tomato vine 14 feet high. Mrs. Julia Stansifer's sister Mrs. House and family, live in the house now where it grows.

Everything climbs, roses and geraniums run up porches and spread over roofs and spread through pine trees a mass of bloom.

The trees of Long Beach are very small compared with those of the older towns. The streets of Redlands as they go up and down or across mountains are like parks; the giant peppers arch over head and often the lower branches touch the ground.

Long Beach is a dry town. It is ruled by the man not the party. This condition was brought about by the women who were given the right to vote. Interest is high now over the Republican Presidential candidates. La Follette spoke two weeks ago last Saturday night. Gov. Hiram Johnson spoke for Roosevelt and Taft has a big following. The party is strong enough but so divided that there is a good chance of the "houn dawg" in the White House.

Long Beach has a fine auditorium for public use and is very proud of its Municipal band. Two free concerts are given daily.

The Shriners have possession of Los Angeles and the surrounding towns this week and their garb and fits are so gay and the decorations so profuse everything has a gala appearance. Between thirty and forty thousand visiting Shriners were expected.

Redland's fame for beauty is far reaching. Lying on the main side its thousands of acres of orange, lemon, tangerine and grapefruit groves whether yellow with fruit or white with fragrant blossoms, spread out to view for miles down into the valley.

Smiley Heights is of world renown, the summit of the mountain from one side of which can be seen the fruitful valley and from the other the Pimato canyon and acres of desert. The Heights gets its name from a New York man, whose money and generosity have made it the great park it is of flowers and trees of all kinds. There are three hundred kinds of the acacia tree to be found there. It is the habitat of visitors from all States and all nations.

Redlands is the reverse of Long Beach, which is always crowded and bustling, always the hammering of nails in the new houses. There one can walk thru parks or for squares on the streets, meeting often no one and hearing nothing but the rush of water in the under ground irrigation canals. Then the homes there are immense mansions in orange setting or terraced lawns on the mountain side.

Sawtelle is in the center of the Lima Bean industry, where the production ranks second in the world. It is about two miles from the ocean and the moisture from the fogs and dews is sufficient to raise two crops of melons, etc., a year without irrigation.

The Soldiers' Home is located there and on the out lying ridges are scores of oil and gas wells. The crude oil spouting out from a depth of 3,300 feet. The spouting was due to the gas in the ground.

The land around Sawtelle is laid off in squares and the ranches usually occupy a square of 40 acres with modern bungalow homes making it ideal farm life. The country is rapidly developing. Beverly is merely a park and a few handsome houses but laid out beautifully. They have built there Beverly Hotel of 300 rooms. They expect the climate to bring many people, also the prospect of the settlement of Beverly Hills, land is offered there in the hills at two and three dollars an acre.

Lying in the midst of acres and acres of English Walnut groves is Whittier another town on the foot hills built up of handsome homes of people of means, laid out originally by the Quakers and named for their pact. They have a large college there. The roads in California are a thing of beauty and joy forever, boundless roads going everywhere. The plans are being made for a thousand miles of coast roads, a couple of miles reaching from one end of the State to the other along the coast.

Los Angeles is the hub of Southern California. Its business parts are narrow and congested. One can scarcely cross the streets the traffic is so great, but the residence districts are spreading farther and finer. Many localities building restrictions are made. The residences must come up to a certain standard.

I am a decided California booster and there is always something to get excited about, the balmy days, the moonshine on the ocean, the roses and orange blossoms, the utter lack of storms, and also, the lack of such rigid conventionality, each allows his neighbor the privilege of doing as he pleases. Taken all around, it is a very good place to "pitch your tent."

Mother.

A woman of eighty years lay dying; by her side sat her son as he reflected that soon he would be gone from his life, he recalled with comfort that he had never in the fifty odd years of his life uttered an unkind harsh or unkind word, and had never by speech or conduct given her a moment of pain or sorrow. Something of the same thought must have come into the mind of the dying mother, for she said: "My son, you were a good boy always. From the very first I felt sure of you and you have never disappointed me. It is a comfort in life and a solace in death to have had such a son."

The land is filled with good mothers, those cornerstones of the home, who unthought by the world have wrought out the destiny of the nation, and we sometimes wonder whether men and women are always as considerate of the mother as is due her.

The good God has made many beautiful relationships, but none so intimate, so tender, so nearly celestial, as the mother-love. To this safe refuge we instinctively turn in our infancy and childhood, and we seek counsel at that time in our more mature years; but it too often happens that we fall in proper respect and affection to the guiding step and light the way to the beyond.

Let us not, men and brethren, at any time be wanting in reverence to the mother who bore us and who was loyal to us when possibly all the world was against us.—Farm Journal.

Drives On A Terror.

The chief executioner of death in the winter and spring months is pneumonia. Its advance agents are cold and grip. In any attack by one of these maladies no time should be lost in taking the best medicine obtainable to drive it off. Countless thousands have found this to be Dr. King's New Discovery. "My husband believes it has kept him from having pneumonia three or four times," writes Mrs. Geo. W. Place, Rawsonville, Vt., "and for coughs, colds and croup, we have never found its equal." Guaranteed for all bronchial affections. Price 50 cents and $1.00. Trial bottle free at all dealers.

Business men are putting up the shutters in Grant county. The News says: "J. Glascock's stock of general merchandise is being closed out by the trustees of the estate and there is a report current that another mercantile establishment will close out its business this fall, which will leave only one large store in Williamstown carrying a general line of dry goods. R. H. Elliott & Co., are also closing out their big hardware store, which still further reduces the number of mercantile establishments here, while J. B. Sanders at Dry Ridge, is closing out his big store."

It is now well known that not more than one case of rheumatism in ten requires any internal treatment whatever. All that is needed is a free application of Chamberlain's Liniment massaging the parts at each application. Try it and see how quickly it will relieve the pain and soreness. Sold by W. F. Berkshire and Sons and E. E. Kelly.

THE MODICAL JUDGE

CHAPTER XI.

The shooting-match at Boggs'. The judge's faith in the reasonableness of mankind having received a staggering blow, there began a somewhat furtive existence for himself, for Solomon Mahaffy, and for the boy. They kept to little frequented byways, and usually it was the early hours of the morning, or the cool of late afternoons, when they took the road.

A certain hot afternoon brought them into the shaded main street of a straggling village. Near the door of the principal building, a frame tavern, a man was seated, with his feet on the horse-rack. There was no other sign of human occupancy.

"How do you do, sir?" said the judge, halting before this solitary individual whom he conjectured to be the landlord. "What's the name of this bustling metropolis?" continued the judge, cocking his head on one side.

As he spoke, Bruce Carrington appeared in the tavern door; pausing there, he glanced curiously at the shabby wayfarers.

"This is Raleigh, in Shelby county, Tennessee," said the landlord.

"Are you the voice from the tomb?" inquired the judge, in a tone of playful sarcasm.

Carrington, amused, sauntered toward him. "That's one for you, Mr. Pegioe!" he said.

"I am charmed to meet a gentleman whose spirit of appreciation shows his familiarity with a literary allusion," said the judge, bowing.

"We ain't so dead as we look," said Pegioe. "Just you keep on to Boggs' race-track, straight down the road, and you'll find that out—everybody's there to the horse-racing and shooting-match. I reckon you've missed the horse-racing, but you'll be in time for the shooting. Why ain't you there, Mr. Carrington?"

"I'm going now, Mr. Pegioe," answered Carrington, as he followed the judge, who, with Mahaffy and the boy, had moved off.

"Better stop at Boggs'!" Pegioe called after them.

But the judge had already formed his decision. Horse-racing and shooting-matches were suggestive of that progressive spirit, the absence of which he had so much lamented at the jail raising at Pleasantville. Memphis was their objective point, but Boggs' became a side issue of importance. They had gained the edge of the village, when Carrington overtook them. He stepped to Hannibal's side.

"Here, let me carry that long rifle, son!" he said. Hannibal looked up into his face, and yielded the piece without a word. Carrington balanced it on his big palm. "I reckon it can shoot—these old guns are hard to shoot!" he observed.

"She's the closest shooting rifle I ever sighted," said Hannibal promptly.

Carrington laughed. There was a rusty name-plate on the stock of the old sporting rifle; this caught Carrington's eye.

"What's the name here? Oh, Turberville."

The judge, a step or two in advance, wheeled in his tracks with a startling suddenness.

"What?" he faltered, and his face was ashen.

"Nothing, I was reading the name here; it is yours, sir, I suppose?" said Carrington.

"No, sir—no; my name is Price—Stocum Price! Turberville—Turberville!"

Hannibal gave him a frightened glance and edged toward Mr. Mahaffy's side.

"It's not a common name; you seem to have heard it before," said the latter.

A spasm of pain passed over the judge's face.

"You've heard it. The name is on the rifle, you say?"

"That's the stock, too," said Carrington, who took the gun and examined it.

"He has indeed found friends," said the judge with mellow unctious, and swelling visibly.

Now Betty caught sight of Carrington and bowed. Occupied with Hannibal's side.

The judge gave a great start, and a hoarse, inarticulate murmur stole from between his twitching lips.

"What do you know of the Barony, Hannibal?"

"I lived at the Barony once, until Uncle Bob took me to Scratch Hill to be with him," said Hannibal.

"You—you lived at the Barony?" repeated the judge, and a dull wonder smuck through his tone. "How long ago—when?" he continued.

"I don't know how long it were, but until Uncle Bob carried me away after the old general died."

The judge slipped a hand under the child's chin and lifted his face back so that he might look into it. For a long moment he studied closely those small features, then with a shake of the head he handed the rifle to Carrington, and without a word strode forward. Carrington had been regarding Hannibal with a quickened interest.

"Hello!" he said, as the judge moved off. "You're the boy I saw at Scratch Hill!"

Hannibal gave him a frightened glance, and edged to Mr. Mahaffy's side, but did not answer.

The judge plodded forward, his shoulders drooped, and his head bowed. For once silence had fixed upon his lips, no inspiring speech fell from them. He had been suddenly swept back into a past he had strived these twenty years and more to forget, and his memories shaped themselves fantastically. Surely if ever a man had quitted the world that knew him, he was that man! He had died and yet he lived—lived horribly, without soul or heart, the empty shell of a man.

A turn in the road brought them within sight of Boggs' race-track, a wide, level meadow. The judge paused irresolutely, and turned his bleared face on his friend.

"We'll stop here, Solomon," he said rather wearily, for the spirit of boast and jest was quite gone out of him. He glanced toward Carrington. "Are you a resident of these parts, sir?" he asked.

"I've been in Raleigh three days altogether," answered Carrington, and they continued on across the meadow in silence.

Here were men from the small clearing in homespun and buttoned or fringed hunting-shirts, with their women folk trailing after them. Here, too, in lesser numbers, were the lords of the soil, the men who counted their acres by the thousand and their slaves by the score. There was the flutter of skirts among the moving groups, the nodding of gay parasols that shaded fresh young faces, while occasionally a comfortable family carriage with some planter's wife or daughter rolled silently over the turf.

The judge's dull eye kindled, the haggard lines that streaked his face erased themselves. This was life, opulent and full. These swift-rolling carriages with their handsome women, these well-dressed men on foot, and women folk trailing after them. Gas Beneath Lawrenceburg

A gas well flowing 500,000 cubic feet per day was completed at Belfast, Ohio, Saturday, Belfast is less than thirty miles from Cincinnati. This calls to mind that just twenty-five years ago this summer natural gas was struck at the fair grounds. There are many persons yet living who remember the excitement which prevailed for a brief period when visions of a gas built metropolis floated before the more sanguine. While these buoyant expectations were not realized, there are still serious minded citizens who hold firmly to the belief that beneath Lawrenceburg there is a vast supply of gas at the command of the one who will demonstrate his determination by drilling until he finds it—Lawrenceburg Press.

SCRAPING BARK FROM TREES

In Case of Ordinary Healthy Tree Treatment is Advocated by Pennsylvania Zoologist.

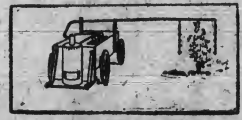

As to the advisability of scraping rough or shaggy bark from apple trees, the state zoologist of Pennsylvania has the following to say: This depends upon the conditions in general. I advise such treatment, especially for rough, scaly bark on old trees; but if the bark that has been roughened by the injurious action of soil sprays, or by burning with fire or some other injury, I am satisfied it would be wrong, because this is the tender bark beneath just what a scab of an animal is to a sore which it is protecting.

Therefore, if the bark beneath be tender, so that it would be injured being scraped, it is best not to do it. In the case of an ordinary healthy tree it is certainly best, but at injured places, such as above mentioned, it is advisable to scrape gently, if at all. On an old tree one cannot apply enough pressure with a short-handled hoe or bark scraper to do any injury, and this will remove many insect pests, such as codling moth, woolly aphis and other hibernating insects, and expose scale insects and other pests to the action of the weather, and of the insecticides to be applied before the leaves appear.

SPRAYER FOR SMALL TREES

Apparatus May Be Wheeled Along Row of Plants With Delivery Pipe on Either Side.

The spraying apparatus shown in the illustration may be wheeled along a row of plants or small trees as desired. The top of the tank is adapted to serve as a platform. The delivery pipe has a pair of downwardly projecting arms, each of which is provided with four nozzles. The delivery pipe may be swung to either side of the tank.

JAPANESE PLUM VERY HARDY

Will Grow on Almost Any Soil and Do Not Need Particular Codding—Come On Early.

Plums of the Japanese variety are popular with most growers, particularly in the east, because they are hardy and come on early. Many of these varieties are the earliest in the market, and as they are always of good color, either cherry reds or light yellows, they sell readily and bring good prices.

They will grow well on almost any kind of decent soil, and do not need to be particularly coddled, although they should have all the care that any good fruit tree deserves.

These trees were planted four years ago in soil from which pine scrub had been grubbed only a few weeks before. The trees are bearing well and show the color and great vigor.

These Japanese plums differ from the domestic varieties in that their leaves are longer, thinner and spicetier, and it has a great tendency to produce lateral fruit buds on the annual growth. Its fruit is mostly short, round and plump.

The Japanese plum is less liable to injury from curculio and black knot than the domestic variety. Mr. Fulkerton says that up to this time his trees have shown no signs of disease or attack from insects of any kind.

HORTICULTURAL NOTES

Trees that are well tended beautifully a home. Fertilize the orchard for next season's crop.

Plum trees should be pruned about the same as apple trees. There is no phase of life that is not influenced by good roads.

Gradually bring the hyacinth and narcissus into the heat and light.

Provide for the future by planning a small strawberry patch this spring. Go over the fruit and vegetables in the cellar, and throw out those decaying.

Unleached wood ashes are rich in potash, varying from six to forty per cent.

The earlier sweet peas are sown the larger the number of flowers produced.

Nearly all varieties of plums bear better crops of fruit when a number of varieties are growing near each other.

Apple scab largely spreads about the time of the first, second, and third sprayings.

When grass is permitted to ripen its seed, it loses the largest part of its nutritive value.

Applying raw rock phosphate to the soil by mixing it with manure is considered one of the best methods of application.

The germs of pest-blight occasionally attack apricot trees, and the only remedy is to cut and burn the infected parts.

Spraying has come to be one of the unescapable tasks of the agriculturist, whatever his particular line of productive enterprise.

FACING A SERIOUS PROBLEM

English Housewife Seem to Be Called Upon to Choose Between Cook and Parlormaid.

Now, the crux of the situation is this: Which of the maids is to go? Must the neat-handed parlor maid take her departure? If so, the lady of the house knows that the early cup of tea will not be ready to start her day, or if she must have she will have to do as her sister from the colonies usually does—make it herself. Women from the colonies, by the way, are apt to be amused at the comfortable existence led by the home people. English gentlemen who have settled in Canada are often compelled to get up of a morning to coal the basement fire for heating the home. Think of the gentlemen of the upper middle classes at home setting up of a morning to kindle the kitchen fire! It is not to be thought of, the suggestion is an impossible one. Then a glance round the drawing room, with its polished floor, its rugs, its ornaments, its coal fire, for preference, makes the middle-aged house mistress go quietly out, close the door of the room, and meditate in solitude. It seems to her that she must go. However, there rises before her the ghosts of the dishes she used to make quite well. It is so long since she touched any kitchen utensils! Would her old skill return to her in her extremity? Alas! she could not reckon upon any such happy coincidence; she, perforce, must continue to rack her brain and pay her cook. Even suppose she did manage to supplement her own cooking by outside aid, what would happen on their social evenings?—London Standard.

ADDED PLEASURE TO VISIT

New Yorker's Trip to Atlantic City Remunerative Both as to His Health and Pocket.

A retired merchant who was well known in the jobbing branch in New York fifteen years ago recently spent some time at Atlantic City, where he took his wife for rest and change of scene, and where he had an unusually pleasant experience. "We met there," so he tells the story, "a man whom I had known in a business way many years ago. We and our wives walked and roller chaired together, and they seemed to enjoy our company as much as we did theirs. On the day before we came away Mr. Blank called me into the billiard room, handed me an envelope addressed to me at my New York home and said: 'I intended to bring you this when our visit here was over and before we went back to our home out west.' The envelope contained a check for a balance which the man owed when his business collapsed in 1894, with interest to date. 'So glad I met you,' he added, 'for I saved the carfare to your house.' The New York man added that the debt had passed out of his mind, together with many others which had gone to "profit and loss" in his old books.

His Righteous Kick.

"Say!" exclaimed the undersized chap, bustling into the room, "isn't this the kickers? I want to air my grouches. I contend that the little man doesn't get a fair shake. People impose on him just because he can't help himself. Take my case. I'm five feet four, and accordingly, I run into a car that's nearly empty, pick out a good seat, open my newspaper, and begin to read. In comes a big, beefy cuss, with a lateral spread of legs and one-half feet. Does he pick out a nice empty seat for himself? He does not. He waddles down the aisle till he sees me. 'There's my meat!' he says; 'he ain't big enough to crowd me.' And he plants himself down by me, jams me over against the end of the seat, crashes my arms against my sides, blame him, and—"

"You're all right, my friend," interrupted the man at the desk, "and you've got a real grievance, but you are tackling the wrong department; the Friend of the People is in room #20."—Chicago Tribune.

Shelves and Straight Fronts.

"There are a great many things in this library that if I had my way would be changed," remarked an aggrieved-looking woman to a librarian the other day. "For instance, look at those lower shelves! They're an outrage!" she said stormily, making a sweeping gesture toward the shelves in question. "Do you wear straight fronts?" she asked with an angry glare, and then without waiting for a reply, announced decisively, "Well, I don't, and I don't I've been wanting that volume down there for the last half hour, do you think I'd dare get it? No, I consider it positively dangerous to take a book off those lower shelves."

Epitaphical Caution.

Before the customer paid his bill the hotel stenographer tore several pages out of her notebook and handed them to him. "Only the notes of his letters," she said to the next customer. "About once in six months somebody comes along who keeps such a watchful eye on his correspondence that he won't even let a stenographer keep his notes. Of course it is nothing to us, and we always give them up when asked to. I don't know what the cautious folk do with them. Destroy them maybe. Anyhow, there is no record of foolish utterances left in the stenographer's books."

Arrangements are being made to oil the streets of Walton again this year as the past two years' experience has made this method of keeping down the dust very popular with everybody. It required about $350 to oil the streets each year heretofore but it will probably take $500 this year owing to the increased price of the oil. The expense is borne by the people by voluntary contribution, and so far the response has been very liberal.

Dr. and Mrs. A. N. Jones spent part of last week at Lexington attending the Commencement exercises of the State College, their son Leslie Jones being one of the graduates. He made a most praiseworthy showing, being one of the six graduates out of 92 graduates who carried off the honors of their class. Leslie graduated in mechanical engineering, and so excellent was his work all along the line that after graduating he was offered a very lucrative position with a large firm at Buffalo, N. Y., and will leave in a short time to assume his duties.

Some person has told that I will not attend a lot in Petersburg cemetery any more, which is a mistake. I am attending to them and will as long as I am able and the parties want me to take care of them. Some have come to me to know if I had given them up as they had been told. Some of the lot owners do not live here but read the Recorder. They think I am not attending to them, so please publish this.

James Jarrell, Petersburg, Ky.

James Mitchell, one of the most successful fishermen on Gunpowder creek, presented this week with about as handsome string of bass, last Friday evening, as ever came in this direction from that stream. They were dressed, ready for the frying pan and the slight weighed seven pounds. Mr. Mitchell is thoroughly acquainted with the habits, and the kind of bait which is required at certain times to tempt the bass and when he goes after them he is sure to get them.

Keenly Gitt, who stuck type on the Recorder away back in 1884, spent a day or two last week in Burlington, looking for the remaining few of his old acquaintances. He has seen a large portion of this country and has developed into a fine looking man. He has crossed the continent two or three times, and is now on his way to Los Angeles, California. He sticks to the printing business, and has worked on many of the leading daily papers in the large cities throughout the country.

C. M. Baldon, of the local grocery firm of Baldon & Sullivan, left last Friday for Colorado, with the apparent intention of remaining. He made no arrangements with anyone to look after his business. Saturday Mr. Baldon's firm in the stock of goods was attached by John P. Duncan, to whom he was indebted on a note. The proceedings have put Newton Sullivan, the other partner, in the firm in an awkward position, but he will pull out alright it is believed as he is a very energetic young man.

Mrs. Asa Cason Dead.

Mrs. Asa Cason died of tuberculosis at her home on the East Bend road about 5 p. m. on Wednesday of last week. The fatal disease resulted from an attack of measles she had several years ago. She is survived by her husband, two daughters, Mrs. Elbert Roberts and Mrs. Leslie Goodridge, and two sisters, Mrs. John J. Rice of Texas, and Mrs. Daugherty, of Kansas, the latter being present at the obsequies. The funeral was preached by Rev. H. C. Wayman, of Walton, at the Baptist church of which the deceased had many years been a member, after which the remains were placed in the vault to await final interment. SEEDING OF ALFALFA.

Must Be Done in the Spring in the 4-11 Sections.

Farmer Cannot Always Secure Sufficient Moisture to Insure Germination in August—Does Better With Nurse Crop.

In Central Nebraska and west, the farmer is in a manner compelled to sow his alfalfa in the spring for the reason that he can not always secure sufficient moisture to insure germination in August seeding. He must therefore sow in April, May or June, when conditions are such as to insure a full stand, says Wallace's Farmer. A half stand of alfalfa is practically no stand.

In the humid section we do not recommend spring seeding at all. Although some men have been successful with it, it is altogether better seed in August when with proper care, the farmer in the humid section can be reasonably certain of a supply of moisture sufficient to germinate his alfalfa seed. Where farmers in the humid section still insist on sowing their alfalfa in the spring, however, we venture to make some suggestions:

There are but two ways of sowing alfalfa in the spring, either with a nurse crop or without. If you do not care to sow alfalfa without a nurse crop until we had in some way sprouted and killed the annual weeds which come up and grow with such luxuriance in the spring. If we were intending to sow alfalfa in the spring, we would begin treatment as early as possible, as if we were preparing for corn. We would disk as soon as the ground was in working condition. We would plow after disking, and harrow after plowing, and harrow whenever we saw the weeds starting until in May. We would then seed to alfalfa, giving it the full use of the land.

If weeds grow, we would not bother with them, but allow them to grow with the alfalfa and then cut the crop when it was beginning to throw out buds from the crown. This will get rid of the annual weeds. There are also a lot of weeds, however, that come up later, and these will give you trouble. It is the custom of a good many farmers, when weeds begin to spring up and threaten to smother the alfalfa, to clip them back. The trouble with this is that this clipping does not help the alfalfa but hurts it for the reason that alfalfa is not accustomed to being cut until it throws out buds from the crown, or the near the ground. The weeds keep growing right along, however, even if cut back; and in our experience we have found that this method of clipping alfalfa before it is ready to throw out buds is a positive disadvantage.

If a nurse crop is used, we would select the earliest, winter wheat, if the stand is not too thick, or winter rye by sowing alfalfa on winter wheat when it is two or three inches high, and then harrowing it as you would clover, you will kill a vast number of the annual weeds that grow in the spring. You will also have conserved moisture by breaking up the crust and, as your wheat will in the latitude of central Iowa, be off about the first week in July, the alfalfa will nearly have made sufficient growth to be cut when the wheat is mowed. The wheat itself will tend to prevent weed growth. Rye, usually, is better than wheat, because it does not usually lodge, and can therefore be cut high, thus avoiding cutting back the alfalfa before it is time.

If neither of these are available, we would use early oats or barley, seeding not more than a bushel and a half to the acre. We would prepare the ground thoroughly, continuing the preparation a week or two longer to get rid of the weeds and then seed.

We do not advise this practice of spring sowing; but if it is adopted, then we think the conditions above outlined would be most favorable for securing a stand.

Be Careful With the Colt.

Colts should not be allowed to stand in stalls where a constant glare of light is permitted to fall on their eyes, as this is the cause of many horses losing their eyesight when only a few years of age. Do not house your colts in any old, dirty place as this will cause them to have lice during winter and spring. When colts are affected with lice the best remedy is to turn them out in the warm spring rains and on grass and the lice will almost immediately disappear. Keep them in a dry, comfortable and well ventilated stable and you can, when the colt reaches maturity and you go to breaking it, see with only scant observation that your good care and handling has done wonders toward the development of your young animal.—Ex.

DE LAVAL CREAM SEPARATOR

A Money Maker and Saver

The Cow's Best Friend

If you are still skimming milk by the old-fashioned "setting" system you are losing about one pound of cream in every four and you are not giving your cows a square deal.

With a De Laval cream separator you would get 20 to 35% more, and much better, cream, and besides would have warm sweet milk to feed to your calves and pigs.

We know that the De Laval will give you better service and last twice as long as any other separator and will be a money-maker for you.

Ask any of your neighbors who use a De Laval what kind of service their machines have given them. If a De Laval will save cream and make money for your neighbors it will do as much for you. Why not give it a trial?

WHY TROYS CARRY MORE

than any other make of the same size

- 1—A TROY is bigger at the mouth than any other wagon. Look at the points marked "A". Then figure for yourself where the biggest strain comes. It's at the mouth of the skids.
- 2—A TROY 3 in. skids really measures 3 1/4 in. at the collar. See point marked "B". That makes the TROY a full size larger all the way through—axles, wheels, etc. Don't you want that added margin of safety?
- 3—The skids are oval, not round. See "A" again. Therefore they take in the full strength of the axles—just where the strength is needed most.
- 4—TROY axles are strictly clear, first-quality hickory. No other timber has the same carrying strength or resiliency. This is just an axle and skid talk. These things count—but they aren't all. We want you to know the TROY all over—from tongue to tail-board. Come in and let us show you why the TROY is the one best from every angle. You will like the price too—it's right.

GOOD CROP PROSPECTS.

Commenting on the crop outlook for Central Kentucky, the Blue Grass Farmer edition of the Herald says:

The splendid agricultural outlook that prevails in this section of Central Kentucky brings cheer to the heart and hope to every farmer, keeps labor fully employed at good wages and stimulates business in every line of wholesale and retail activity. The wave of optimism is even shared in by the housewife, as she sees a larger and cheaper supply of vegetables, fruits and dairy supplies and welcomes the coming of fatted broilers at reasonable prices.

The season contrasted with that of a year ago is one extreme compared to that of another. In 1911 a severe drought, the potato crop was practically ruined and there was but little fruit. Strawberries had dried up on the vines and gardens had almost perished. There was no reason for planting and tobacco setting. Farmers could not even plow the ground, so dry and parched was the earth. Gloom and disappointment pervaded the country and farmers wore a look of despair. Meadows were a failure and grass was drying up. Babbling brooks no longer sparkled with a flow of rippling waters and pools and rivulets were fast becoming short of a supply of stock water. There was no improvement for many weeks and harvest time found empty granaries unfilled. Soiling crops had been overlooked and anticipation of a favorable season and of grass parched and perishing live stock were without food of succulent properties.

With the summer season almost gone the rains came too late, except to revive the struggling tobacco fields. Farmers went into the winter with a scant supply of farm provender and before they emerged were paying war time prices in order to save their stock, which had been reduced in numbers to the minimum. Conditions were some what ameliorated by a heavy fall supply of green grass, which passed with the coming of winter.

But it is an ill wind that blows no man good luck. During the drought, coupled with the deep freezes of winter, pulverized the soil and the seed bed for the 1912 crop was perfect. The plow went down deeper than ever before and turned up soil full of plant life. There were practically unknown and the loosening of the soil globules made available more nitrogen, phosphorus, and saltpeter for sustaining vegetable life, as seen in the growth of the gardens and which later will be more fully amplified with a luxuriant growth of blade and stem in oats, corn and tobacco.

The heaviest crop of blue grass seed in a period of a third of a century is on due to the death of the grass during the drought period, and an increase in the plant food through the mellowing of the soil and the absence of a freeze during the budding period of the grass.

The potato crop is almost practically assured; strawberries are large and luscious, other fruits will appear in abundance, tobacco plants are thrifty and plentiful, meadows are teeming in a wealth of blade, increased acreages of corn and tobacco are to be seen, bountiful supplies of vegetables of every kind and discription are to be had, barn yards alive with flocks of chickens and turkeys and dairy supplies in abundance tends to smother the unjustifiableness of high prices and to combat the efforts of the milk trust in maintaining prices for dairy products of from 50 to 100 per cent higher than those that prevail in adjoining counties and cities.

Let Us Remember.

That honest, whole-hearted work between the plow handles counts just as much as it does in a running bank.

That it is the man that puts his soul into his work that helps his neighbor to see the beauty of earnestness.

That there is more power in a smile to tide over a hard place, than in the hardest possible work with hand or foot.

That a cherry word will travel farther and do more good than any doctor in the town.

That all kinds of farm stock thrive better on good care than they do on ground feed at $50 a ton.

That the wife and children stand in the doorway to greet the man who waves his hand to them from the hilltop and calls out: "Coming, sweetheart!"

That farm success lies not so much in the dollars laid up in the bank, as in the loving thoughts we awaken in the hearts of the men and women we know us.

That to be our best we must feed our bodies with the best of food, give our minds the purest of thoughts upon which to dwell and feed our souls on the true Bread of Life day by day.—Farm Journal.

DEAL WITH CUT-WORM PEST

Test Course is to Plow in Fall and Renew War in Spring—Poisoned Bran May Be Used.

The test course in dealing with cut-worms is to plow early in the fall and continue cultivation with a spring-tooled harrow until freezing time prevents it and then renewing the war on them by extra early spring cultivation.

There is no easy method of dealing with these pests, but they may be killed if one is willing to go after them with determination. An effective method of combating them is to use sweet and poisoned bran, says the Prairie Farmer. The method is to add one part of Paris green, by weight, to thirty or forty parts of bran, stir this together, while yet dry, and then mixing it with water that has been sweetened by the addition of strong or coarse molasses. The older and stronger the molasses, to give it color, the better it will be.

The bran should be moistened with this sweetened water, until it is made into a damp mass, just wet enough to stay in little heaps. A very small pinch of this placed at the base of each garden plant to protect it will be effective. The worms will eat it in preference to the plant.

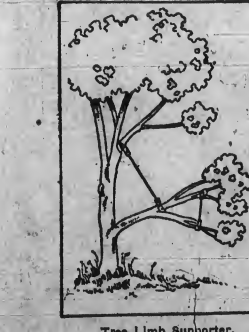

To protect corn it is advisable to drop a pinch in the corn row each step or two across the field, so that the worm will find this and eat it and let the corn remain. It would be better to put the poison out before the corn appears above ground and thus kill the worms early, than to let them remain untreated until after the corn is once out off.

It is much better to put out the poison bran in the evening while it is damp, or on a damp day, so that it will not be dry when these pests come forth at night to seek their food. It will be found by them just about as readily if it is slightly covered with earth and for this reason, if it should become necessary to protect domestic fowls from it, you could cover it with loose earth at the time of application.

SUPPORTER FOR TREE LIMBS

Wire Contrivance Fastens Sagging Branch to One Above—Illustration Shows the Plan.

A contrivance for supporting limbs of trees that are either broken or sagging with their own weight or a heavy burden of fruit has been designed by a California man. Two iron hooks have slots at both ends and a hole at one end. One of the hooks is thrown over a sound upper limb, near the crotch, and the other is adjusted on the limb below that requires support. A piece of strong wire is then fastened to both hooks by means of the slots and perforations and pulled up till the sagging branch is in proper position. The wire is then twisted fast and there is no danger of its yielding or breaking, as rope has been known to do.

For Fence Posts. Hollyhocks and golden glow may be grown along the fence at the back or side of the house, and require but little room.

PLUM TREES NEED SPRAYING

When San Jose Scale is to Be Treated Lime-Sulphur Will Be Given in the Spring.

Plum trees need some spraying, usually on about the same lines as the work given to the apple orchard. Spraying should be given annually, usually two to four times each year, and in all cases must be thorough to be worth while. Careless spraying is a waste of time and material. When the San Jose scale is to be treated, the lime-sulphur spray will be given early in the spring. A heavy spraying of Bordeaux mixture or of plain blue vitriol solution before the buds open will aid in checking brown rot and other diseases. Another spraying of Bordeaux mixture, with arsenical poison added, should be given soon after the blossoms fall. It should be specially noted in this connection that Bordeaux mixture should be only half strength for plum trees. Some varieties, especially those of the Japanese origin, the foliage seriously injured by strong Bordeaux. Perhaps the best formula for this work is as follows: Fresh unslaked lime, three pounds; copper sulphate, two pounds; water, fifty gallons.

The mixture is then made up in the usual way, and applied with a nozzle throwing a fine, mist spray.

GRAFTING OLD GRAPE VINES

Cleft-Graft a Little Above or at Level of Ground, or Even Below, is Best Method.

In reply to a query as to whether an old grape vine, trained as shown in the illustration, can be successfully grafted, F. E. Gladwin of the Geneva, N. Y., experiment station, writes in the Rural New Yorker as follows:

"I should say from your diagram that the vine in question is trained to the horizontal arm spur system and that you desire to graft the numerous spurs along the arm. It is very doubtful that you can be successful, as there is too much opportunity for the parts to dry out before a union takes place. I should much prefer to cleft-graft a little above or at the level of the ground or even below. This can be done as in top-working apples, cutting the scions a little thicker on the outside. It is best to start the taper opposite a bud, placing the scion in the cleft so that the bud forces out and is at or just above the level of the cut stock. If the stock is large enough, insert two scions. If they are placed so that the sapwood of scion and stock are in contact, mound up dirt firmly till the top of the scion is just exposed. If it is impossible to do the grafting before sap flow begins, delay it till the vigorous flow is over and then do it. There is a decided interruption after the first flow. Some even prefer the latter period for grafting. It will then be a simple matter to train the growth as before, and you will have a better vine than could possibly be obtained in the way you suggest.

Rest Period for Trees.

All trees and shrubs, in fact all perennial plants, must have a period of rest. This is true even of the evergreen, whose foliage, while retaining its color, is as nearly destitute of vitality during the winter as trees which shake off their leaves in the autumn.

Grapes.

The grape is an American fruit for the most part. It can be so easily propagated and grown. You don't have to make wine and get rich for a few hours.

HORTICULTURAL NOTES

Gather all the brush from the orchard before it turns brown.

Trees injured by freezing very often need to be severely cut back.

The appearance of the orchard is helped by clearing it of dead branches. Keep the orchard land in good tillth. The trees can be set as soon as the leaves fall.

Gonoborers require a cool situation, with plenty of air and moisture, and should be partially shaded. As soon as caterpillar nests are in evidence, burn them without delay before new colonies are formed.

Good fruit can be raised only with care and attention given to spraying, pruning and generally good care.

Gather up dead branches and burn them, as they are apt to harbor bark beetles, one of the worst orchard pests.

Blackberries should be given space in the garden, for there are few, if any, fruits that give quicker and better returns.

A yearling tree is preferred by many to older trees. They are thought to be safer to transplant than two-year trees.

Plant a cover crop in the orchard. Rye, barley, wheat and oats are good root-leguminous plants, but the legumes are better.

Don't expose the roots to the hot sun and drying wind. Keep them in a "puddle" until the moment you are ready to plant them.

If some of the trees are stunted but partially, they may be doctored successfully by using a paste made of clay and cow manure.

FARM AND BEES

HOW BEES COLLECT POLLEN

Important Part Played by the Auricle in the Process—Dust on Body Hairs.

The pollen dust gathers on the body hairs of the bees as the result of the visits paid to the flowers. These hairs as seen under the microscope, are branched, and therefore are admirably adapted to hold the pollen, writes F. W. L. Sladen in the Gleanings in Bee Culture.

In the humble bee (and probably also the honey bee) the pollen dust in the hairs on the thorax is collected on brushes on the inner sides of the metatarsi, or basitarsi, of the foot, of the middle pair of legs, which are

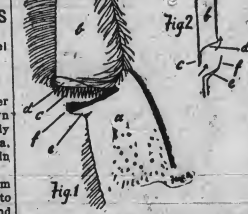

Fig. 1—Junction of tibia and metatarsus in hind leg of worker honey bee, outer side.

Fig. 2—Diagrammatic section of the same, showing mode of conveying pollen. a, metatarsus; b, tibia; c, comb; d, receiver for pollen; e, auricle; f, fringe of hair on auricle.

moistened with honey from the tongue to make the dust adhere. The pollen dust in the hair on the abdomen is collected on brushes on the inner sides of the metatarsi of the hind legs, and this is probably moistened by rubbing the hind legs together.

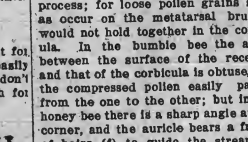

After this the pollen is transferred to the corbicula (or pollen-basket) on the tibia of the hind legs, where, as every one knows, it accumulates into a great lump as the result of repeated contributions from the metatarsi. But how does it get there? It is evident as Cheesman observed, that the pollen on the right metatarsus is transferred to the left corbicula, and the pollen on the left metatarsus is transferred to the right corbicula. Cheesman supposed ("Bees and Beekeeping," 1884) that the metatarsus discharged its pollen on the corbicula by scraping its brush on the upper side of the tibia; but I find that this is not the case. The pollen is scraped off the metatarsal brush by a comb (c) situated at the end of the tibia on the inside, and it passes into a small concave receiver (d) that joins the comb; then, when the leg is straightened, a projection on the metatarsus called the auricle (e) closes upon the receiver, compresses the pollen, and at the same time forces it out to the lower end of the corbicula, which is here slightly depressed and almost wholly devoid of hairs. The compression of the pollen in the receiver is an essential part of the process; for loose pollen grains such as occur on the metatarsal brushes would not hold together in the corbicula. In the humble bee the angle between the surface of the receiver and that of the corbicula is obtuse, and the compressed pollen easily passes from the one to the other; but in the honey bee there is a sharp angle at the corner, and the auricle bears a fringe of hairs (f) to guide the stream of pollen to the corbicula; also the honey bee's auricle is evidently pressed back by the pollen, for it has no other means of escape.

POST PULLER SAVES LABOR

Implement Can Be Made of Strong Tongue Taken From Some Discarded Farm Machine.

When a fence must be moved a good post puller saves an unmerciful lot of back ache and time, writes Gilbert F. Parrish in the Wisconsin Agriculturist.

Such a lifter can be made of a strong tongue from some discarded farm machine. A strip of five-eighths inch made into a heavy claw at one end and bolted on the tongue so that the claw projects beyond the end of the tongue. A heavy ring with a stout chain attached is also a part of the outfit. The ring is put over the post down to the ground. The claws are caught under a link of the chain and a block put under the pole as a fulcrum. This lever will raise the post with very little effort. Every farm ought to have such a lifter. The parts should be solid and strong, for the strain is tremendous.

The Clark forces will present

The farmers in Boone county have been having a hard time trying to get a stand of corn-some have planted the third time.

The Democrats who will assemble in Baltimore next week will have good reasons to believe they are there to nominate the next President of the United States.

The political doings in Baltimore next week will be a first-class Sunday school affair as compared with what is going on at Chicago, this week under the name of the Republican national convention.

From the tenor of the reports from Chicago in the last Sunday's papers it appeared very much that both Uncle Sam's army and navy would be required at Chicago this week to prevent a Republican national riot.

Senator-elect Ollie M. James has been suggested as temporary chairman of the Democratic National Convention to be held at Baltimore, and no doubt he is now a very busy individual preparing his speech by which he will put himself in nomination.

Those who were in charge of the Taff steam roller in Chicago last week and the week before, became ashamed of themselves and became generous enough to permit Teddy to have a few of the contested delegates, but probably that was done to give their action some semblance of fairness.

Farmers in Woodford county are complaining of serious depredations by blackbirds, which are more numerous than they ever were before. The birds infest cornfields by the thousands, devouring the grains of corn that have been planted. Farmers are shooting the pests by the wholesale, but say they find them very hard to drive off.

teenth census report, was distributed as follows: Native whites of native parentage, 1,883,108; native whites of foreign or mixed parentage, 124,701; foreign-born whites, 40,033; negroes, 261,631;

Some of us old Fogies will find it hard to believe that Uncle Sam, thru the postal department, has actually made a contract to have his postals carried by airships between New York and Washington. The ships will make no stops between the cities and will fly at a speed of the latest trains, making the distance of 225 miles in less than four hours. There is no joke about this; it is strict business, and the company making the contract is supposed to be fully able to carry out its obligations.
But just think of a ton, or two of mail matter shooting thru the sky at the rate of 70 to 80 miles an hour.

The Kentucky Children's Home

bers of the family, sent to school, lies. If any of the readers of a home, and would like to take a child to raise, if they will the matter up with them.

The crop of bluegrass seed which is gathered is considered the heaviest that has been raised for several years. Central Kentucky produces practically all the bluegrass of the world, and this crop of seed is one of the important revenues of the Central Kentucky farmer. The annual production runs all the way from 200,000 to 800,000 bushels, and this year it is estimated may reach almost 1,000,000 bushels. The price varies from 40 or 50c to $1 per bushel. An acre of bluegrass will produce from 15 bushels of seed, and as the value of the seed in no way diminishes the value of the grass for mowing purposes, the sale of the seed stands as a special premium paid annually to the owner of the bluegrass seed.

The Public Drinking Cup.

The following is the law that abolishes the public drinking cup:
"It is enacted by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky:

"The use of the common drinking cup on railroad trains, and on board of public hotels, public boarding houses, restaurants, or steamboats, in stores or other publicly frequented places in Kentucky, is hereby prohibited.
No person or corporation in charge of the railroad, or of the boarding house, public hotel, or restaurant, or of the store, or of any other place in Kentucky, the use of the drinking cup in common There shall be posted in a conspicuous place by the drinking places mentioned in foregoing paragraph, a warning card-board with the above printed thereon in large letters, so they can be easily read. Any person or corporation violating the provision of this act, upon conviction, shall be fined in any sum not less than one dollar, and not more than ten dollars, and each day's violation of any of the provisions of this act shall be

The Trend of the Times.

We are just now experiencing a great mental and spiritual awakening. It is an awakening similar to that of Rome in the time of Augustus. The trend of this awakening will extend to every domain in our country. Our town constitutes a trinity of strong men and the epoch they will make will be of importance that we will refer to it as the Reformation. The vast changes that are occurring in our village will live in history as the great Reformation. Some will call it the Age of Electricity, others will call it the Age of Concrete.
At the present day a new army of architects and builders have come forward to take charge of the improvements, and remove all the old stone and replace them with concrete fresh from the quarries. Paved walks are never the spontaneous evolution of the people of the town. A kiss of diplomacy, argument and giving about the betterment. Everybody in town knows that main street needs paving, which will give it a modern appearance and enhance the general beauty of the town. A generous parent should say if there must be day that the child may enjoy the changed conditions and new surroundings. Is sufficient to awaken every man to duty. Such is the trend of the times.

Give The People Their Money.

It has been stated that the 1909 pool money will be paid out and all claims against the society settled up by Sept. 1st.
Sometime ago it was reported that payment would be made by July 1st. The unrest of the people at present makes it necessary that the society finish up the business and give the people the balance of their money. Three years ago the society made a take to sell a small lot of tobacco and turn over the money and the delay has done much to sour the people on the pool proposition. The average farmer had rather have a dollar today than notice in twenty years from now.
The pool money from the market reports that President LeBus is buying the 1909 pool tobacco for his factory in Louisville and we hope he will be liberal enough to all should use the tobacco made by the manufacturer tobacco brand and the Strater factory. This people might do if that factory were willing to pay a living price to farmers for their tobacco, but if they buy the balance of the 1909 crop for a small price, very few farmers will feel like buying the Strater plug. Owen Democrat.

Very fine and badly needed

Covington merchants are offering many extra inducements to have the country people visit their city this week. They have been quite successful the past year in their efforts to supplant old time business policies and inaugurate for Covington a new business era. The old time business men have been succeeded by a younger and more up-to-date set, who are installing into their city new commercial life and making it worth while, for the people in the territory tributary thereto to call on them for any and all their supplies. Covington merchants will do as well by you as those in other cities.

The late planting of the corn crop followed in many instances by a bad stand is not encouraging to the farmers, and to acquire a good crop favorable conditions from now on and a late start are necessary. Many of the farmers have despaired of making more than a half of a crop of corn this season, and those who have to buy corn on which to feed cows and horses may as well calculate to be confronted by a stiff price per bushel this fall.

A fellow in a neighboring town

The farmers' experience with seed corn this season ought to satisfy them that the proper thing to do with their seed is to test it before planting. Hours testing seed corn will save many days' labor in replanting, besides, the young corn in the field will all get the same start.

We trust our correspondents will call to mind our request that their news items be mailed us as early in the week as possible and it will greatly facilitate our effort to give space to this class of news, which we appreciate, and we hope our contributors will bear this in mind.

Good roads make any community more prosperous. They enable the farmer to market his crops at any time of the year. Then at the town that has good roads leading into it, all else being equal is better than is the town which has poor roads. All citizens receive a direct benefit from good roads.

Wishing Ring, the 941 to 1 shot at Latonia, Monday, belongs to R. M. McMillan, who bought and now owns the D. M. Snyder farm near Burlington on the Bellevue pike. Unfortunately Mr. McMillan was not betting on Wishing Ring, but had his money on a loser. Only four people had money on Wishing Ring and each got $1,985.50.

Not only are fraternal societies in many towns adopting joint memorial service but here and there they are shifting from the second Sunday in June to the Memorial day consecrated to the soldiers of the republic. The ranks of the Civil war veterans fade away others must arise to keep this sacred day prominent in the minds of the rising generation.

The public drinking cup in Kentucky is a thing of the past. The law enacted by the last General Assembly eliminating it became effective June 12. State Board of Health will take it upon itself to see that the law is observed, it is said, and in Louisville the City Health Department will co-operate, according to Dr. Witherspoon, Assistant Health Officer, this means that all public buildings, including railway stations and halls, the public drinking cup must give way to the individual drinking cup. People will find this a very great inconvenience until they fast themselves to the new law.

MORE HORSE POWER NEEDED

More Economical Feeding of Work Stock on Southern Farms of Primary Importance.

To use more horse power and less man power per acre or to quit farming is a necessity confronting the south.

There should be more mares on the farm. In the future, few small farmers will find it profitable to keep mules; the colts must pay for the expense of using more horse power. In this connection, the more economical feeding of work stock on the farm is of primary importance. Feeding a horse or a mule on pulled corn fodder and corn is so expensive and out of date that it is surprising to find any one doing it. Farmers have fully proved that pasture for summer and well-cured hay for winter should be the main reliance. As a pasture is not meant a brush patch or a field of weeds, but a tract of land well set in nutritious grasses and well located so as to be able to be usable at all times.

The best results are obtained by providing two pastures, in order to alternate in their use, and especially to allow one to have quite a growth of grass for late fall feeding. Some farmers use one pasture for late fall and spring, and the other during the summer and early fall months; others believe that the best results are obtained by alternating the use of these pastures every month. It is just as injurious to the rapid growth of grass to keep it close grazed as it would be to a bush to cut it off every morning. It is estimated that three or four times as many animals can be kept on a given number of acres by dividing the land into two pastures and using them alternately for grazing. It is certain that the stock does better under such conditions.

Madrid Bend.

Down at Madrid Bend where the Mississippi River makes a detour of thirty-five miles only to come back within a mile of the place where it departed from the even tenor of its way there is a kink in the straightening out the kink by digging a canal.

The canal would have to be about as broad as long. Its length would be a little over a mile and it would have to be a mile in width to accommodate the waters of the Mississippi, and even with such generous dimensions it would not be half-way adequate to the job in flood time.

The three states of Missouri, Kentucky and Tennessee are considerably mixed up in the vicinity of Madrid Bend. The steam boat traveler who would undertake to decide who's who and what's what in that interesting region would find himself hopelessly mixed in his geography and thoroughly convinced that things are not what they seem.

For there the Father of Waters wobbles, most amazingly and flounders around in the three Commonwealths like a whale attempting a grisly bear dance on dry land. It is beyond the bounds of possibility that there are dwellers on some of the islands along the river who do not know with any degree of certainty in what State they reside—and some of them doubtless are quite contented not to know and have never fretted themselves about the question of sovereignty.

It is at Madrid Bend that Kentucky is cut in two by the Mississippi River and the State of Missouri, a small segment of the Commonwealth being enclaved in the bend considerably remote from the main territory. Wolf Island, the most notably boy of land in the river in that vicinity, also is a part of Kentucky.

The little city of New Madrid, Mo., is intensely interested in the canal proposition and is raising a subscription in furtherance of it. New Madrid suffered greatly during the recent flood and the canal would alleviate the situation for the city in periods of high water. It has been anticipated for years that the river would some day take the short cut on its own initiative, but so far it has not done so. There is no certainty about what the river is going to do, and the possibilities in flood time are a constant source of apprehension. Given a fair start the Mississippi probably would dig the canal in short order, for the big stream is an indefatigable digger, but is decidedly eccentric in its excavations. It has its own system and its methods are beyond human comprehension. Nobody but Uncle Sam is big enough to "go a projickin'" with it. New Madrid hopes to have the government assistance in the undertaking—in fact will have to, have it if the canal scheme ever materializes.—Courier-Journal.

Coming His Way.

Good things are still coming the way of Oscar Vest, the well known young Democratic politician of Carrollton. The latest honor and lucrative appointment he has received is the post of Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms of the Democratic National Convention, which meets at Baltimore, Md., on June 25th. Mr. Vest was notified by Hon. John L. Martin, of St. Louis, Sergeant-at-Arms of the Democratic Convention, that he had been named for this high honor. The position pays $10.00 per day, and carries with it many privileges and the chance to rub elbows with all the dignitaries of the party in the nation. Mr. Vest has accepted the appointment.—Carrollton.

KENTUCKY NEWS

Mrs. Mary G. Walker brought to the Advocate office a curiosity in the shape of a "white" blackbird. The bird was caught in the yard of the School for the Deaf and had a mate that is a "black" blackbird.—Danville Advocate.

Crawford Beauchamp, of near Harwood, was in town Thursday and stated that he has on his farm a single row of corn almost thirty-five miles long. The row, however, is not straight, but is arranged spirally around the field.—Hardinsburg Leader.

Several bushels of bluegrass seed, cut green and not in the best of condition, were turned down by the local buyers last week, and according to the purchasers there has been a great deal of the crop harvested too early in this county.—Winchester Democrat.

Despite the knockers and would be prophets work progresses nicely on our new railroad. Work is being carried on at both ends of the road. The Owen Co. grade will be finished to Louisville August 1st. By the first of the month the farmers will put at least one hundred teams upon the grade and the work will be pushed.—Owen Democrat.

Lincoln county has broken all records in Kentucky for political pig hunters and many are feasting sumptuously, while a swarm of other pig hunters are left out on the trail. It is currently reported that Lincoln county has more guards, clerks and officers under the Democratic administration at Frankfort than the entire city of Louisville and Jefferson county.—Danville Advocate.

J. H. Throckmorton, of the Farmersville community, says he has a pond on his place that has been a puzzle to him and the neighborhood the past four years. In the wet season the basin is empty, but in the dry summer months there has always been an abundance of water. He does not know why the water collects in the dry weather, but says it is a fact that the basin does fill up when the pond is most needed.—Princeton Leader.

Every Central Kentucky farm should have a silo. We do not pretend to advise the farmer what material to use or what size to build his silo. Any kind, whether of wood, concrete or brick, is preferable to none. Don't delay the matter. The harvest time will soon be here. We would not advise the farmer to go in debt for an automobile, but we would advise such action in the erection of a silo.—Lexington Herald.

A number of housewives report loss of little chickens by the savage attacks of jaybirds. When the chickens are but a few days old the jaybirds pounce on them and kill them by pecking open their tender heads. They then make a meal of the brains of their victims. They probably have heard of the feasts the old Roman emperors used to make off the brains of humming birds and peacocks, and wished to imitate their example.—Blue Grass Clipper.

Esquire C. D. Brown, of this district, is the only split-log drag enthusiast in the county. The "squire" was in town Saturday and said he was going to keep up one quarter of a mile of road by dragging it when needed. He has already dragged this piece of road twice, and says it is in fine shape—looks like a race track. He says he is going to keep up this quarter of a mile without charge to the county, and he expects to have the best piece of road in the county next spring, when other roads get muddy and impassable.—La-Center Advance.

The Two Thirds Rule.

It is not likely that any candidate for the presidential nomination at the Baltimore Convention can receive a two-thirds vote on the first ballot. It is conceded by parliamentarians and others who have given the question due consideration that the Convention can adopt, reject or amend any rules by a majority vote, and accordingly can nominate a candidate for president in the same way. The two-thirds rule has heretofore prevailed in Democratic National Conventions, and it is the custom to adopt the rules which governed the last previous convention, hence the general opinion that a two-thirds vote will be necessary to make a nomination. Should the convention determine to adopt the majority rule it would simplify the situation and probably result in the nomination of Speaker Clark on the first ballot. A majority vote in the convention would be 340. Mr. Clark claims that he already has 470 votes, only 130 short of a nomination. Some of the other candidates are not willing to accept these figures. But any attempt to abolish the two-thirds rule would very likely stir up a tempest.

Arkansas peachgrowers predict a very large yield this season. Single orchards will turn out hundreds of car loads. It is said, and one known as the Highland orchard, the largest in the world, promises 2,000 car loads. The orchard produces 4,000 acres, all Elbertas. Another has 2,000 acres. In 1911 it yielded 200 car loads at a net profit of $250,000. Ten years ago this land was sold at $7 an acre.

WHY TROYS CARRY MORE than any other make of the same size

- 1—A TROY is bigger at the mouth than any other wagon. Look at the points marked "A". Then figure for yourself where the biggest strain comes. It's at the mouth of the skains.
- 2—A TROY 3 in. skain really measures 3 1/2 in. at the collar. See point marked "B". That makes the TROY a full size larger all the way through—skains, wheels, etc. Don't you want that added margin of safety?
- 3—The skains are oval, not round. See "A" again. Therefore they take in the full strength of the axle—just where the strength is needed most.
- 4—TROY axles are strictly clear, first-quality hickory. No other timber has the same carrying strength or resiliency. This is just an axle and skain talk. These things count—but they aren't all. We want you to know the TROY all over—from tongue to tail-board. Come in and let us show you why the TROY is the one best bet for every angle. You will like the price too—it's right.

Give the Boy a Pig.

As soon as your boy is old enough to take an interest in anything give him a sow pig. Never mind—what breed, but be sure it is a pure bred pig.

If your boy's tastes and inclinations are at all toward stock raising, make him a partner in your business just as soon as he is old enough to bear the responsibilities.

Boys who early have a chance to raise hogs almost always become successful men.

If you give the boy a pig let the gift be absolute; have no strings on it. Allow him to reap the rewards.

Many a boy has had the foundation of a prosperous, honorable career laid by having been given a hog. Boys thrive on encouragement of this sort. If you have a boy give him a chance.

Some have sent this office a copy of the "chain prayer" with the request that we make nine copies of it and mail them to that many of our friends. We are also told that if we fail to do this some great calamity would befall us. Every now and then this scheme bobs up and people are set to work copying it from fear of the threat implied. We declined to add that much to the postoffice revenue, preferring to use our own form and time for such serious matters. We cannot find any Bible warrant for such a scheme, for we are told that when we pray to "use not vain repetitions."—Blue Grass Clipper.

NEW STYLE OF MILK BOTTLE

Has Small Opening at About Spot Where Bottom of Cream Line Is Quite Apt to Be.

Various devices have been invented to get the cream out of a milk bottle and a Michigan man has contrived a way that involves a new bottle. In this new bottle there is a small opening at about the spot where the bottom cream line is apt to be. Normally this opening is plugged with a removable pin, but when the cream is to be run off this pin is taken out and the cream allowed to flow through the hole. To do this, however, air must be admitted to the top of the bottle, so the plug is made with a sharp point which can be jabbed through the pasteboard seal that is in the top. It is important to keep each plug with its particular bottle, for once the plug is lost the bottle is of no use until another stopper can be found for it.

New Style Milk Bottle.

PREVENTION OF ROPY MILK

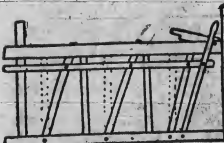

Caused by Certain Bacteria, One Type of Which Is Found in Dirty, Stagnant Water.

A woman reader wishes help regarding ropy milk, asking the cause and the cure. The milk is strained at night and the next morning the cream is ropy and must be thrown away. It is not always easy to trace the cause of ropy milk to its source. Without going into any lengthy explanation, it may be said that ropy or slimy milk is caused by certain bacteria. One type may be found in dirty, stagnant water. If the cows wade in this water their flanks and udders become the resting place for this type. The bacteria are easily transferred to the milk at milking time. The stable becomes infected, as it were, and also the utensils that come in contact with the milk. The germs lodge in the crevices of the utensils and readily propagate in the warm milk. The cure lies in absolute cleanliness. All utensils should be thoroughly scalded. Lime is an excellent destroyer of all germ life. The utensils may be given a coating of the slaked lime, then washed in boiling water. It may be necessary to give the stable a thorough cleaning with lime used as whitewash.

HANDY DEVICE IN THE BARN

Lever Attached to End Used for Opening and Closing Stanchions—How It Is Made.

I have a handy device for opening and closing stanchions, says a writer in the Missouri Valley Farmer. When making it I took first a strip of one by four and bored one-half inch holes in it. These holes were as far apart as the stanchions were at the top.

The Lever Does It.

Then I bored holes the same size near the bottom of the swinging side of the stanchion. I bolted the strip to the stanchions, and at the end attached a lever by which the stanchions could easily be closed. The lock on the end of the stanchion is the only one now that need be closed, as the strip keeps all the others closed.

Effect of Feed on Milk.

Some dairymen believe that if the feed of their cows is changed it will have a bad effect upon the milk flow, but repeated scientific experiments show that changing from one feed to another, and frequently additions to the regular feed, helps the milk flow.

Money in Dairymaking.

There is money in dairymaking in spite of a prevalent notion to the contrary, but it needs a combination of good cows and good management to get it out.

MANAGING A MATURE BULL

Animal Should Be Kept in Well-Fenced Pasture—Ration of Wheat and Ground Oats Is Good.

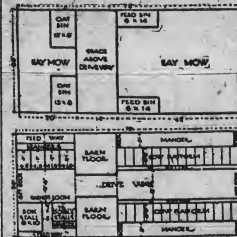

The service bull should be kept in a well-fenced grass pasture with a shed to go under in stormy weather during the grazing season. Give a mixed grain ration of wheat bran and ground oats. Give two or three quarts of grain night and morning. If grass is short, an armful of cornfodder should be fed twice a day. The cow to be served may be turned into the lot with the bull; after service, give a small feed of bran and while bull is eating, throw the stanchion lever, thus securely fastening the bull; the cow may then be removed without danger. By having the cows served so that part of the herd will come fresh in the fall and part in the spring, a regular quantity of milk may be had the year round, without the necessity of selling off half-fat cows at ruinous prices and buying in fresh cows at high prices. When this method is followed, the dairymen is always in debt to the cow dealer.

The bull should be kept in good thrifty condition. A cross bull may often be tamed by turning one or two dry cows into the lot with him. Bulls should have daily exercise and be grain fed. If this is not done, they may become impatient or slow in serving. The young bull should be kept in a separate pasture and not allowed to run with the heifers.

PLAN OF SATISFACTORY BARN

Building With Cement Basement and Holding Twenty-five Cows Is Described and Illustrated.

My barn has a cement basement, the walls being eight feet in the clear, excepting where the driveway goes through, writes W. J. Yarnall in the Standard Gazette. The side walls are 16 inches at the bottom and 12 inches at the top. The end walls are 14 inches at the bottom and the same at the top. The driveway goes through on the level of the ground or about four inches above the ground level. It all has a cement floor. The barn cost $1,000.

Satisfactory Barn.

all about $3,000. The cement basement cost with the wall about $1,000 of this.

The barn holds 38 cows, 14 cows on a side. It also holds eight horses. It has one horse stall, one double stall and four single stalls, and a harness room.

Keeping Milk Sweet.

One of our enterprising dairymen sent a bottle of milk to Paris at the time of the exposition. It made the journey over and back, a trip of 28 days, and was still sweet. There was no preservative used, and the only precaution was to have the dishes and bottle perfectly sterile, cooling the milk at once and keeping it all the time at a low temperature. This seems a good while to keep milk sweet, but it shows what cleanliness and a low temperature, can do with milk.

DAIRY NOTES

The baby calf should have her rations changed by degrees. Name the calves from the first and their training will be much easier. A calf should be fed five times daily about three pints at each meal. One of the greatest mistakes in dairy farming is having too much land.

No farmer can afford to have a cheap, inferior made silo, on his farm. Regularity in feeding and milking will go a long way toward making dairy work successful. After a cow begins giving new milk you will find that her udder is sometimes "caked." Rub it gently. A cold rain, fall or spring rain, will check the flow of milk as much as a snow storm if the cows are exposed.

Look out for the gentle bull. Remember that it is not usually the roaring, bellowing, blustering bull that does the killing.

Do not feed the cows corn meal if you are feeding corn silage, for there is as much corn in the silage as the cows should eat.

Butter from fresh and properly ripened cream not over one day old keeps better than does butter made from sweet cream.

A sore test (remember the sore may be inside) will cause a cow to kick, but if handled gently she will not take on the kicking habit.

The heifer that is cared for and handled gently throughout her entire life will need a little breaking in when it comes time to milk her.

The long, flat-bottomed udder of the Arabian type of the breed, and no other breed is able to show such wonderful development of the fore udder.

SWINE BREEDING
By T. R. Bryant, of Kentucky State University.

The swine industry in Kentucky deserves much more attention than it now receives. Not only should the number of animals produced annually be increased, but also the breeding and feeding should receive more careful attention.

To begin with, we can not afford to raise any but the best hogs. By this we do not mean any particular breed, but we do mean that the animals should be of some breed. A good grade is better than a poor animal of pure breeding, but the average pure bred is infinitely better than the average grade, and the animal is ready for market it will command the top price, whereas the scrub will probably sell 50 cents lower.

Just here it is well to remember that this 50 cent reduction must be taken from our margin of profit, which is narrow enough already.

Inheritance largely fixes the possibilities of an animal, furnishing the detailed plans and specifications beforehand, while the feeding and building the structure and maintains it. Some feeders advocate cross breeding of hogs, holding that the cross bred animals make better feeders. Even if we grant this to be true, the same feeder will admit that the second cross is very poor.

One of the best features of any kind of stock farming is that it stimulates other farm activities. The farmer who raises hogs produces other farm products. Even if we grant this to be true, the same feeder will admit that the second cross is very poor.

CHAPTER XIII.

Bob Yancy Finds Himself.

Mr. Yancy awoke from a long dreamless sleep; heavy-lidded, his eyes still open. For a moment he struggled with the odds and ends of memory, then he recalled the fight at the tavern, the sudden murderous attack, the fierce blows blossoming and dealt him, the knife thrust which had ended the struggle. Therefore, the bandages that now swathed his head and shoulders; therefore, the need that he should be up and doing—for where was Hannibal?

Suddenly a shadow fell obliquely across the foot of his narrow bed, and Cavendish, bending his long body somewhat, thrust his head in at the opening. He found himself looking into a pair of eyes that for the first time in many a long day held the light of consciousness.

"How are you, stranger?" he demanded, in a soft drawl. "Where am I?" The words were a whisper on Yancy's bearded lips. "Well, sir, you are in the Tennessee river to certain. Polly! you jest step here."

But Polly had heard Cavendish speak, and the murmur of Yancy's voice in reply. Now her head appeared beside her husband's. "La, you are some better, ain't you, sir?" she cried, smiling down on him. "It's been right smart of a spell, too; yes, sir, you've laid like you was dead, and not for a matter of hours either—but days."

"How long?" "Well, nigh on to three weeks." They saw Yancy's eyes widen with a look of dumb horror. "And you don't know nothing about my neevy—you ain't seen or heard of him, ma'am?" faltered Yancy.

Polly shook her head regretfully. "Ten, or thereabouts, ma'am. He were a heap of comfort to me—and the whisper on Yancy's lips was wonderfully tender and wistful. He closed his eyes and presently, lulled by the soft ripple that bore them company, fell into a restful sleep.

The raft drifted on into the day's heat; and when at last Yancy awoke, it was to find Henry and Kappel seated beside him, each solacing him with a small moist hand. Mrs. Cavendish appeared, bringing Yancy's breakfast. In her wake came the Countess with the baby, and the three little brothers who were to be accorded the cherished privilege of seeing the poor gentleman eat. Cavendish presented himself—the open—duty as a door.

"This looks like bein' alive, stranger," he commented gaily. "You-said ain't told me yo' name yet?" said Yancy.

"It's Cavendish. Richard Keppel Cavendish." "My name's Yancy—Bob Yancy." Mr. Cavendish exchanged glances with Mrs. Cavendish. By nod of her dimpled chin the lady seemed to urge some more extended confidence on his part. Chills and Fever seated himself at the foot of Yancy's bed.

"Stranger, what I'm a-goin' to tell you, you'll take as bein' said man to man," he began, with the impressive air of one who had a secret of great moment to impart. "Ever hear tell of lords?"

"No," Yancy was quick to notice the look of disappointment on the faces of his new friends. "Are you ever heard of royalty?" and Cavendish fixed the invalid's wandering glance.

"You mean kings?" "I shore do." Yancy made a mighty mental effort. "There's them Bible kings—" he ventured at length.

Mr. Cavendish shook his head. "Them's sacred kings. Are you familiar with any of the profane kings, Mr. Yancy?"

"Well, taking them as they come, them Bible kings seemed to average pretty profane," Yancy was disposed to defend this point.

"You must a heard of the kings of England. Sho, wa'n't any of yo' folks in the yar agin' him?"

"I'd plumb forgot, why my daddy fit all through the war!" exclaimed Yancy. The Cavendishes were immensely relieved.

"Now you-all keep still," said Cavendish. "I want Mr. Yancy should get the straight of this here! The various orders of royalty are kings, dukes, earls and lords. Earls is the third from the top of the heap, but lords ain't no slouch."

"Dick had ought to know, fo' he's an earl himself," cried Polly exultantly.

"Sho, Richard Keppel Cavendish, Earl of Lambeth! Sho, that was what he was! Sho!" and some transient feeling of awe stamped itself upon their small faces as they viewed the long and limber figure of their parent.

"These here titles go to the eldest son. He begins by bein' a viscount," continued Chills and Fever. "It was my great grandfather come over here from England. His name was Richard Keppel Cavendish, same as mine. He lived back yonder on the Caro. land coast and went to risin' tobacco. I've heard my grandfather tell me he better folks as his father was, but he better than he seemed, and he better than he seemed."

about him they'd respect him mo', and mebbe treat him better. Well, sir, he married and riz a family; there was my grandfather and a passel of girls—and that crop of children was the only decent crop he ever riz.

"My grandfather said he never knowed a man with the same aversion agin labor as his father had. Folks put it down to laziness, but they misjudged him, as come out later, yet he never let on."

"Then one day he got his hands on a paper that had come across in a ship from England. All at once, he lit on something in the paper, and he started up and let out a yell like he'd been shot. 'By gump, I'm the Earl of Lambeth!' he says, and took out to the nearest tavern and got b'illin' full. Afterward he showed 'em the paper and they seen with their own eyes where Richard Keppel Cavendish, Earl of Lambeth, had died in London. My great grandfather told 'em that was his uncle; that when he left home there was several cousins—but they'd up and died, so the title come to him. He never done a lick of work after that."

"I'm an orphan man of title now and it's been my duty to take Polly and the children and go back to England and see the king about my title. Don't you reckon he's got the notion the Cavendishes has petered out?"

Mr. Yancy considered this likely. The furious shrieking of a steam-packet's whistle broke in upon them. "It's another of them haws, want in all the river!" said Mr. Cavendish, and fled to the steering car.

CHAPTER XIV.

The Judge Sees a Ghost.

Charley Norton's good offices did not end when he had furnished Judge Price with a house, for Betty required of him that he should supply that gentleman with legal business as well.

Thus it happened that Judge Price, before he had been three days in Raleigh, received a civil note from Mr. Norton asking him to search the title to a certain timber tract held by one Joseph Quiltard. The judge, powerfully excited, told Mahaffy he was being understated and appreciated.

The immediate result of Norton's communication had been to send the judge up the street to the court house. He would show his client that he could be punctual and painstaking.

Entering the court house, he found himself in a narrow hall. He entered the county clerk's office. He was already known to this official, whose name was Saul, and he now greeted him.

"A little matter of business brings me here, sir," began the judge, with a swelling chest and mellow accents. "I am in some haste to look up a title for my client, Mr. Norton."

Mr. Saul scrambled up out of the depths of his chair and exerted himself in the judge's behalf.

"This is what you want, sir. Better light the ledger to the window." He drew forward a chair as he spoke, and the judge, setting himself, began to polish his spectacles with great deliberation.

"You've set on the bench, sir?" suggested Mr. Saul.

"In one of the eastern counties, but my inclination has never been toward the judiciary." He was turning the leaves of the ledger as he spoke. Suddenly the movement of his hand was arrested.

"Found it?" asked Mr. Saul. But the judge gave him no answer; he was staring down at the open pages of the book. "Found the entry?" repeated Mr. Saul.

"Eh—what's that? No—" he appeared to hesitate. "Who is this man Quiltard?"

"He's the owner of a hundred-thousand-acre tract in this and abutting counties," said Mr. Saul.

"Who has charge of the land?" "Colonel Pentress; he was old General Ware's law partner. I've heard it was the general who got this man Quiltard to make the investment, but that was before my time."

The judge lapsed into silence. A step sounded in the narrow hall. An instant later the door was pushed open, and grateful for any interruption that would serve to take Mr. Saul's attention from himself, the judge abruptly turned his back on the clerk and began to examine the record before him. Instantly, however, the cold, level tones of the voice that was addressing itself to Mr. Saul quickened the beat of his pulses, the throbb of his heart, and struck back through the years to a day from which he reckoned time. He turned slowly, as if in dread.

What he saw was a man verging on sixty, lean and dark, with thin, shaven cheeks of a bluish cast above the jaw, and a strongly aquiline profile. Long, black locks swept the collar of his coat, while his tall, spare figure was habited in sleek broadcloth and spotless linen. For a moment the judge seemed to struggle with doubt, then his face went white and the book slipped from his fingers to the window ledge.

The stranger, his business concluded, swung about on his heel and quitted the office, leaving an entry in one of his ledgers. The judge shuffled to his side.

"Who was that man?" he asked thickly, resting a shaking hand on the clerk's arm.

"That—Oh, that was Colonel Pentress I was just telling you about."

"Has he always lived here?" "No; he came into the county about ten years ago, and bought a place called The Oaks."

"Has he a family?" The judge appeared to be having difficulty with his speech.

"Not that anybody knows of. Some say he's a widower, others again say he's an old bachelor, but he does say nothing. The colonel's got his friends, to be sure, but he don't mix much with the real quality. One of his particular intimates is a gentleman by the name of Murrell."

The judge nodded.

"I've met him," he said briefly. Acting on a sudden impulse, the judge muttered something about returning later, and hastily quitted the office.

In the hall the judge's steps dragged and his head was bowed. He was busy with his memories. Then passion shook him.

"Damn him—may God—for ever damn him!" he cried under his breath, in a fierce whisper.

They finished supper, the dishes were cleared away and the candles lighted, when the judge produced a mysterious leather-covered case. This he opened, and Mahaffy and Hannibal saw that it held a handsome pair of duelling pistols.

"Where did you get 'em, judge?" "Oh, ain't they beautiful!" cried Hannibal, circling about the table in his excitement.

"My dear lad, they were purchased only a few hours ago," said the judge quietly, as he began to load them.

Norton had ridden down to Belle Plain ostensibly to view certain of those improvements that went so far toward embellishing Tom Ware's estate.

"Do you think Belle Plain is ever going to look as it did, Charley?" as we remember it when we were children?" asked Betty.

"Why of course, it is, dear, you are doing wonders!"

Ware stalked toward them. Having dined with Betty as recently as the day before, he contented himself with a nod in her direction. His greeting to Norton was a more ambitious undertaking.

"I understand you've a new overseer?" "Then you understand wrong—Carrington, my guest," said Norton. "He's talking of putting in a crop for himself next season, so he's willing to help me make mine."

"Going to turn farmer, is he?" asked Ware.

"So he says." Norton was extremely pleased with Betty as recently as the day before, he contented himself with a nod in her direction. His greeting to Norton was a more ambitious undertaking.

"Now, what do you wish to say to me?" he asked.

"We want your word that you'll keep away from Belle Plain."

"Well, you won't get it!" responded Norton.

In the same instant one of the men raised his fist and struck the young planter in the back of the neck.

"You cur!" cried Norton, as he wheeled on him.

"Damn him—let him have it!"

It was mid-afternoon of the day following before Betty heard of the attack on Norton. She ordered her horse saddled and was soon out on the river road with a groom in her wake. Betty never drew rein until she reached Thicket Point. As she galloped into the yard Bruce Carrington came from the house.

"How is Mr. Norton?" she asked, extending her hand.

"The doctor says he'll be up and about inside of a week. If you'll wait I'll tell him you are here."

Carrington passed on, into the house. He entered the room where Norton lay.

"Miss Malroy is here," he said. "Betty—bless her dear heart!" cried Charley weakly. "Just toss my clothes into the closet and draw up a chair."

"There—thank you—come along in now."

And as Carrington quitted the room, Norton drew himself up on the pillows and faced the door. "This is worth several beatings, Betty!" he exclaimed as she appeared.

He bent to kiss the hand she gave him, but frowned with the exertion. Then he looked up into her face and saw her eyes swimming with tears.

"What—tears?" and he was much moved.

"It's a perfect outrage!" Betty paused irresolutely. "Charley—" "Yes, dear."

"Can't you be happy without me?" "No."

"But you don't try to be!" "No use in my making any such foolish effort, I'd be doomed to failure."

"Good-by, Charley—I really must go."

He looked up yearningly into her face, and yielding to a sudden impulse, she stooped and kissed him on the forehead, then she fled from the room.

TRAINING THE DOG TO WORK

For Farm Use Scotch Collies Are Most Useful and Besides They Are Most Companionable.

Scotch Collies are the most useful dogs for the farm, besides being the most companionable. They are naturally intelligent and do not range over the country, as do most dogs. With proper care a Scotch Collie pup can be trained to do almost any dog trick. A well-trained Collie will bring stock from the pasture more satisfactorily than most boys. The herdsmen at the Kansas Agricultural college has a Collie dog which is very useful for that purpose.

The demand for Scotch Collies is steadily increasing as their value on the farm becomes known. It is better to buy pups or young dogs, as they are more easily trained. They usually are black, with tan legs and tan dots over the eyes and feet, tall tipped with white, and often with white collars. With their large, shaggy, silky coats they are very pretty. As house dogs, they have no equals.

The pup must be treated kindly. Scolding and whipping will soon spoil him. In training him, always use the same words and he will soon learn to know what you mean. After he has learned one lesson well it is no trouble to train him to do other things. When he is older, if you have to whip him for disobedience, be sure that he is again friendly with you before you let him go. If you do not you are likely to spoil him. It requires patience to train a dog right.

EUROPEAN ENEMY OF CARROT

Rust-Fly, of Recent Importation, Does Much Damage to Roots—Excellent Remedy Given.

The carrot rust-fly is a very serious enemy to the plant. It is a comparatively recent importation from Europe, having first been observed in this country about twenty-five years ago. Its attack may first be noticed in spring, when the leaves of young carrots turn a reddish color, and on examination the roots will be found to be covered with rusty blotches—hence the name of the insect.

The parent of the mischief is a small two-winged fly, quarter of an inch long, body dark green, head and legs pale yellow and the eyes red. From the eggs, which are laid on the stem below the surface of the ground, the young maggots make their way into the root, and tear the tissue in a similar manner to the cabbage maggot; the attack causes the rusty blotches to appear. The maggots of a later brood infest the full-grown roots and continue their work of destruction in the root-house during the winter. Celery and parsnips are also attacked.

Carrot Rust-Fly in Its Various Stages and Damaged Carrot.

Preventive measures seem to be the only remedies available. To deter the fly from laying her eggs, the rows of young carrots, when ready for thinning out, should be sprayed with kerosene emulsion, or dusted with sand or plaster in which coal oil is mixed, half a pint being used to a peckful of the material. The application should be made weekly, and especially after hoeing, until about the middle of July.

Good Roads & Farm Notes

By means of seed corn selection, the corn crop is moving northward.

Poultry manure is particularly good for forcing the growth of onions.

It is none too soon to begin to think about putting up a silo for next fall.

For the West there is still no better variety of early potatoes than Early Ohio.

A proper kit for farm work is about as handy a thing as the average farmer can buy.

The asparagus should have had a coat of manure last fall, but better late than never.

Tobacco stems strewn on the ground at the base of rose plants will help to keep away insects.

Big prices for sweet potato plants demand first pulling, or no later than the second at the most.

No land is so rich that its owner can afford to waste the manure that is made by his farm stock.

Don't plant the large varieties of cucumbers expecting to raise as many as if the cluster kinds were used.

Some enterprising gardener should work up a fancy trade on AI vegetables in the neighborhood of cities of 5,000 or over.

Nurse the young clover and the alfalfa, plus for more of both another season, also a large acreage of root crops and pumpkins.

Alfalfa does not attain maturity until the third or fourth year; therefore, do not sow it expecting to get the best returns in less time.

For general or common use, caustic or burnt lime or ground limestone are employed almost exclusively for the correction of soil abnormalities.

Two blades of grass where only one grew before are all right, provided each blade is as good as the one, and also provided that the soil is not too great.

Farm and Road Improvement

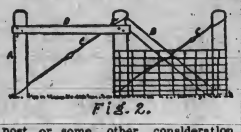

SOLVE CORNER POST PROBLEM

Use of Heavy Stone or Concrete Post Will Be Practically Everlasting—Method is Shown.

An old method of setting a firm corner post, but one not known by everybody, is the "dead man" way, which is fully described and illustrated by Carl Brann, of Lima county, Kansas, in the Homestead. The corner post is set and the brace extended to the bottom of the second post in the usual way as shown in Fig. 1, but the guy wire from the top of the second post pass on both sides of the brace and of the corner post near the ground, and being crossed back of the post pass around a large stone or piece of durable wood buried in the ground. These wires are then twisted between the posts to make them tight and hold firmly in place about the brace and corner post. A corner so set cannot pull up. However, as the best galvanized wire will rust in a few years in the ground the life of such a corner is not so long as may be desired. The use of a heavy stone or concrete post set in the same manner without the "dead man" will be practically everlasting, but in many cases the cost of the stone or concrete post, or some other consideration, makes the plan impracticable. The following method (shown in Fig. 2) has been successful where it was impossible to dig deeply. Three posts were set at a distance of ten or twelve feet apart. Then the brace and guy wires were attached to the second and third posts in the manner usually employed between the corner and second posts. A guy wire was run from the top of the second post to the corner post at the ground and a stout board, or 2x4 nailed to the upper end of the first and second posts. The wire of the third post was stretched to the second post and wrapped around it. The space between that and the corner post was closed with fencing boards or wire, as was most convenient.

MAINTENANCE OF GOOD ROADS

Cannot Be Kept in Proper Condition Unless Kept Well Drained and Free From Holes.

No earth road can be maintained in good condition unless it be so constructed as to drain well, and unless it be kept free from rats and holes. The best method of maintaining an earth road, especially a prairie road, is by the systematic use of the road drag. A sand road is never good under any circumstances, but certainly is not improved by crowning. A sand road is at its best when moist, so it should be left flat. No one wants a sand road, so, if possible, clay should be added to, and mixed with the sand, making what is known as a sand clay road.

The old way, and it is used today by many, of filling a mud hole with brush with a little earth on top, cannot be too strongly condemned, and is only permissible in cases of emergency, when it is impossible to drain the hole or to get sand or stone to fill it. The overseer or foreman should in dry weather center his work on such places until the rain is raised to a sufficient height to drain well. Many overseers have brushed hauled two miles to fill a mud hole, when sand is within an hour's distance of it.

If farmers do not take a community interest in the improvement of the roads and put their shoulders to the wheel we will surely remain "stuck in the mud."

Manure and Silage Corn. Twenty tons of corn silage an acre were harvested last fall by George L. Hylop of Ohio. He uses it for fattening cattle and hogs. The most valuable thing about this yield is that it is the result of proper utilization of barnyard manure. The manure shed has an important place on the farm.

Function of Barnyard Manure. Barnyard manure is very essential in garden making because it furnishes both plant food and humus. It also warms the soil and makes it easier and cheaper to cultivate. It cannot easily be dispensed with.

Squash Bugs. Squash bugs may be trapped by laying shingles near the plants. The bugs will be found under them early in the morning.

BEES ARE QUITE PROFITABLE

As Adjunct to Farm Nothing Pays So Well When Properly Cared For—Work for Women.

By MRS. L. TAYLOR, Ohio. As an adjunct to farming I knew of nothing, when properly cared for, that pays so well, considering the time spent and the money invested, as bees.

Last year, two colonies produced 80 pounds of colony of surplus honey, which sold for $10. The bees cost $6, so there is a gain of $14, or 100 per cent. No other stock or crop paid us as well.

A bee-keeper not far from here averaged 113 pounds of honey from his colonies. He sold it for 16 cents a pound. This seems like a very large yield, but with improved methods we expect to do even better. One farmer in this community manages to clear $100 each year from his bees. He keeps from twelve to fifteen colonies, and his farm does not suffer from neglect in the least.

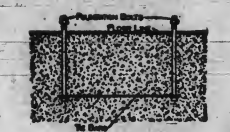

The men have no time to attend to the bees, the women can look after them. They are generally about the premises and have a better opportunity for watching them.

For gentleness in handling, ability to gather honey and to keep free from moth, I prefer the Italians. Any chaff will answer the purpose. It should be chaff lined all through; and for wintering out of doors a chaff cushion should be placed over the bees to absorb moisture.

TO MAKE FOUNDATION SOLID

Gasoline Engine Will Not Do Good—Work Unless Placed on Good Substantial Base.

It is unreasonable to expect a gasoline engine to do good work unless it is mounted on a solid foundation. There is nothing better than concrete for this and when placing same in position, fastenings should be set in the concrete as shown in the accompanying illustration, says the Prairie Farmer. These fastenings can be made by any blacksmith or in most any farm work shop. They are placed in the concrete when it is poured and should, of course, be placed so as to engage with the holes in the body of the engine. Care should be used not to injure the threads on the fastenings, and to this end it is best to keep the nuts on same.

Starting Plants in Houses.

A good way to start plants or cigar boxes is to plant cabbage, lettuce, parsley, pepper, radish and tomato seeds in them, about the middle of this month. Place the cans or boxes in the kitchen windows.

Cauliflower, celery and egg plant may also be started in the house. Bore holes in the sides of these boxes, an inch from the bottom, in order to give ventilation. Start cucumber and squash seeds in strawberry boxes.

Spreading Manure.

Get into the habit of hauling manure to the field every day as it is taken from the barn. The sooner manure is spread in the field the smaller the loss of fertility incurred, and the smaller the amount of labor required to handle it.

Bees and Farm Notes

Asparagus will grow in any good well-drained farm land.

Onion sets should be set out just as early as ground can be worked.

Almost all our common garden vegetables require a somewhat alkaline soil.

Selling all the hay and grain raised on the farm is a sure method of selling the farm.

Young cabbage plants require thorough protection in the hotbed and cold frame.

It is seldom that the very early varieties of potatoes yield so well as those a little later.

Long, straight rows will make easier work with the horse cultivator or wheel hoe later on.

For sandy land the mammoth red clover has proved superior to alsike or the medium red varieties.

Herold pruning measures are needed to bring many old trees into bearing, but it need not all be done the first year.

There is no danger of an overstep soil for asparagus. In fact this crop can only be grown profitably on very rich land.

Did you ever think how much ground a good ear of corn will plant? It is just that much ground wasted if you plant a poor ear.

It is as idle and useless to expect good crops from inferior seed as it would be to endeavor to breed thoroughbred cattle from scrub stock.

Asparagus roots, properly planted, fertilized and given good culture, will continue to produce large spears for fifteen to twenty years in succession.

Alsike clover is a perennial and can be grown on ground that is too low and moist for the medium red or mammoth; it is grown equally well on high ground.

WASHINGTON NEWS.

Washington, June 18.—Is the beef trust bigger than the United States government?

Made bold by its victory, after a nine years' delay in the courts, in the famous "beef trust" suit started against it by former president Roosevelt, this trust has boosted meat prices to the highest figure ever known in this country, not even excepting war times. The trust gives a "shortage in the live stock supply" as its reason for increasing prices.

That this excuse is only a subterfuge is shown by the last report of the government bureau of statistics, which shows that instead of a shortage in the live stock supply, there has been a steady increase.

The supply of cattle at the seven principal western markets in April is the last decrease reported says: "The number of cattle shipped to these markets last month was greater for the same month a year ago by 13 per cent, and greater than the same period for 1910 by 40 per cent. There was a proportionate increase in the supply of hogs and sheep, also, and that the weight of these animals was up to the standard of former years is indicated by the fact that the supply of dressed meat now on hand in the packers' warehouses is greatly in excess of the amount held there last year."

This report shows that the beef trust has made up its mind to force the consumer to pay the cost of the nine years' suit it has just run. All the big fees paid out to lawyers for keeping the trust magnates out of the penitentiary will be taken from the purses of the consumers. Nothing must interfere with the trust's dividends!

Has Her House in Order.

Preparatory to caring for visitors during the Democratic national convention, Baltimore has been putting her house in order for three months, and the city is spick and span, and ready for callers.

Many of the streets leading from the convention hall to the railroad stations have been repaved. The street railway company has laid special tracks and loops to handle the crowds and ordered sixty new cars at a cost of $300,000.

At night the stranger will have no difficulty finding his way to the convention hall. He need only gaze upward and follow any of the three great beams of light which will be focused on the Fifth Regiment Armory from three parts of the city. These searchlights will shine down from the tops of two hotels and from the tower of a casualty company's building.

The appropriation for this special lighting is $15,000. The convention hall itself will be a blaze of lights, the ribs of the curving roof being outlined by 10,000 electric bulbs. The block of Bolton street leading to the main entrance of the hall will be brilliant with a colonnade of electric lamps on pillars 50 feet apart.

The portico of the city hall will be outlined with electric bulbs and some of the city's principal monuments will be treated in the same way.

The park department which has charge of the plant and flower decorations, has done much to beautify the exterior of the convention hall by screening the temporary doorways and stairways leading from the street to the balconies with trees and shrubs. Among the trees planted for this purpose are elms and oaks some forty feet tall.

Cowpea Hay for Dairy Cows.

What about the hay crop? Will you have plenty of good forage for next winter or will you be forced to fall back on straw or crab grass hay? Cows cannot maintain their milk yields unless fed liberally of right kinds of feeds. These feeds must contain a relatively large amount of protein. This is furnished most cheaply in forage. It is not found in sufficient quantities for milk cows in timothy, prairie grass, crab grass, sorghum, or straw, but is found in cowpea, soy bean, alfalfa or clover hay.

Cowpea hay has about the same feeding value as alfalfa and is some better, than clover. Cowpeas can be sown after wheat or oats, and will generally mature enough to cut for hay before frost. As soon as the crop which they are to follow is removed the stubble land should be double plowed and then harrowed to make the best possible seed bed. The seedling can be done with an ordinary grain drill using the oat seed rate. This will sow at the rate of 4 or 5 pecks to the acre.

It is best to cut the peas for hay when the grain is just ripening, shocking them in narrow high shocks the day after cutting and allowing to cure in the shock for a couple of weeks. With favorable weather the hay will be ready to bale, stack or mow away at the end of that time. Rains do not harm the hay very much when in the shock.

On average soil sown as indicated above in an average season, cowpea hay makes about a ton per acre. Farmers with dairy cows or any other live stock should sow as much as possible on stubble or any other vacant lands. Now is the time to get ready to sow.

A sprained ankle may be a rule be cured in from three to four days by applying Chamberlain's salve with each bottle. For J. W. Berkshire and E.

W. M. RACHAL & CO.,
UNION, KENTUCKY.

An Important Business Statement.

The statement of several principal men in the Beef Trust as to the increase of 16,000,000 in the population of the United States in the last ten years, or 20 per cent addition to the number of people, and but two per cent increase in the number of cattle in the same period, is worthy of the most careful consideration when the higher cost of beef is under thought or discussion.

It brings into the very strongest possible light the necessity of enlarging the number of cattle in the country, if our population is to enjoy the supplies of beef in the households as of past years, and falling to do this means a vast increase of the extreme high price, and a consequent reduction in the quantity and quality of the meat supply of the masses of our people.

In considering nearly every source of food supply it will be well to bear this increase in the number of consumers fully in mind, and for those persons engaged in agriculture or in the promotion of agricultural interests to plan and prepare for the annual greater demand for provisions for the households that is so assured to present itself.

It is not only in the matter of food supplies that this steady growth of our population is strongly stimulating business but it is in constant operation in nearly every phase of our financial, commercial and industrial work, and in the majority of instances this increasing population is benefitting conditions.

The 16,000,000 of population added in the past 10 years has created greater demand for lands in the country and realty in the cities and towns and their suburbs.

This increase has given consumers to the manufacturers and the farmers, customers to the merchants, the shopkeepers and the distributors of outputs and products.

It has helped the bankers, the physicians, and the attorneys without doubt, and in brief it is but logical to say that it has contributed its full ratio, 20 per cent, to the aggregate business of the United States.

The next 10 years fully as great a number of persons will probably be added to our census rolls and this means still greater demand for the products of fields and farms, still greater need of the outputs of our mills and factories, still larger trade for our merchants, shopkeepers and dealers, and it should mean a greater degree of prosperity to the entire population of the nation.

If the statement of the packers emphasizes the need of more cattle, it also in its reference to the increased population carries with it great encouragement as to the development of our country and its trade.—Enquirer.

HOW TO COOK HUSBANDS.

A Recipe Whereby They Are Rendered Digestible and Agreeable.

"A great many husbands are spoiled by mismanagement. Some women go about it as if their husbands were balloons, and blow them up; others keep them constantly in hot water; others let them freeze by their carelessness and indifference. Some keep them in a stew by irritating words; others keep them in pickle all their lives. Now it is not to be supposed that any husband will be good, managed in this way; turnips wouldn't; onions wouldn't; cabbage heads wouldn't; but they are really delicious when properly treated."

"In selecting your husband you should not be guided by the all-wise appearance as in buying mackerel, or by the golden tint, as if you wanted salmon. Be sure to select him yourself, as taste differs. And by the way don't go to market for him, as the best are always brought to your door."

"It is far better to have none, unless you patiently learn to cool him, preserving kettles of the finest porcelain in the best but if you have nothing but an earthenware pipkin it will do, with care."

"See that the linen in which you wrap him is nicely washed and mended, with the required amount of buttons and strings, nicely sewed on. Tie him in the kettle with a strong cord and Comfort, as the one called Duty is apt to be weak. They sometimes fly out of the kettle, and become burned and crusty on the edges, since, like crabs and oysters, you have to cook them alive."

"Make a clear, strong steady fire out of Love, Neatness and Cheerfulness. Set him as near this as seems to agree with him. If he sputters and fizzes, don't be anxious, as some do, to tilt him; they are quite done. Add a little sugar, in the form of what confectioners call Kisses, but be anxious to pepper on any account. A little spice improves them, but it must be used with judgment."

"Don't stick any sharp instrument into him, see if he is becoming tender. Stir him gently, watching the while lest he should put 'any eye on any eye' as so become incensed."

"You cannot fail to know when he is done. If thus treated you will find him very digestible, and agreeable, nicely with you and the children."

Some person took a package from Mr. Lively's mail box out on rural route one, day fast week. The party who took the package is guilty of a very serious offense and if Uncle Sam apprehends him he will be given considerable trouble and likely will draw a term in prison.

After repeated replanting some of the farmers are not getting a stand of corn, and they are becoming very much discouraged.

A little more grain, plenty of good hay, and the thorough use of the currycomb and brush is about the only whip that most farm horses need.

CONGRESSMAN ROUSE

Busy Looking After The Interest of His Constituents.

Prof. Dix received the following from Congressman Rouse a few days since:

"I have just had a talk with Mr. D. J. Crosby, Chief of the Agricultural Experiment Station at the Department of Agriculture, and told him that your High School was in need of many things connected with your experimental station work and he will correspond with you as to your wants and will help in some way. I told him of your work the past year and that your school was the first one in Kentucky to take such steps and I hoped that the Department would be able to give all the encouragement possible. You will likely hear from him this week and I will as you know be glad to do anything here that I can."

As a result of Congressman Rouse's interview with Mr. D. J. Crosby, Prof. Dix received the following under date of June 12:

"Prof. E. L. Dix, Burlington, Ky.

"Dear Sir:—In a conversation this morning with Congressman Rouse, he stated that you are at the head of a new high school which is endeavoring to be of the greatest possible service to the community thru the teaching of agriculture and carrying on other work that will be of direct assistance to the pupils in their preparation for life work. He requested that I communicate with you and render whatever assistance is possible from this Department, which I am glad to do."

"You will understand that we have no appropriation which enables us to give direct financial assistance, but I shall be glad to furnish whatever publications I can and give such advice and assistance as the office affords. I am enclosing a list of apparatus and supplies that a high school should have in order to teach agriculture to the best advantage. In the beginning I presume you will find it impossible to secure more than a small part of the apparatus here suggested, but with a plan for future development definitely before you it will probably be possible to purchase more wisely than otherwise. Before securing apparatus for the teaching of agriculture, it would be well to write to the Central Scientific Co., of Chicago, for their catalogue of apparatus, this being about the only company in this country giving special attention to apparatus for agricultural purposes."

"Standard sets of seeds, grasses, cereals in the head, and other agronomy specimens can be procured from the College of Agriculture, Lancaster, Pa. I am sending you several publications that I think you will enjoy reading, particularly one entitled Community Work in the Rural High School, which describes several useful features of High School extension work. If this office can be of any further service to you I shall be glad to learn of your needs and to do what I can to supply them or to put you in touch with people who can be of direct assistance."

Yours Very Truly,
D. J. CROSBY,
Specialist in Agricultural Education.

We miss you and your willing hand, your fond and earnest care—our home is dark without you, Johnny, we miss you every where. Frank Cousin Kane.

Deep cultivation of corn is not in any way an insurance that the yield will be good. In fact, after the first cultivation deep tillage is injurious to corn. The feeding roots as a usual thing lie very close to the surface and deep cultivation breaks these roots to such an extent as to decrease the yield of corn. After the first time over shallow cultivation will give the best results.

Took the Examination.

The following named took the examination, last Friday and Saturday, for certificates to teach in the schools of this county:

M. E. Haley, Walton. Nellie Vest, Verona. Jessie Carroll, Walton. Georgia Ritcher, Lawrenceburg, Indiana. Agnes Hodges, East Bend. Ruth M. Kelly, Burlington. John Northcutt, Burlington. Mary Uitz, Burlington. Marjetta Stephens, Bullittville. Lorena Hater, Hebron. Elizabeth McDaniell, Hebron. Eunice M. Stephens, Bullittville. Ruth M. Griffin, Erlanger. Christine Stephens, Locust Grove.

The examination for State Certificate was taken by the following:

Miss Nannie Hamilton, Verona. Miss Mattie May, Verona. An earnest effort will be made in this county to enforce the compulsory educational law, and parents who fail to send their children to school as the law requires will be reported to the county superintendent of schools who the law requires to have the parent summoned to appear before the county judge to show cause why the child is not attending school, and in the event a good excuse for the child's failure to attend school is not forthcoming the parent will be fined. This failure of the new school law will be very unusual for a while with some parents.

The New Hunting Law.

The new hunting law went into effect on the 1st inst., and every hunter must secure a license from the county clerk before he can go into the fields, the license being good in any county in the state for one year. The annual fee is $1 for each license. The county clerk receives 15 cents for each license issued, and the remainder of the money goes to the state treasury, where it is kept separate from other money in what is known as a fish and game fund. The license fee for non-residents of the state or aliens is $15 a year. The law provides, however, that a man or any member of his family may hunt on his own premises without a license. Under the new law, a penalty of from $1 to $25 may be imposed by the court on a person hunting without a license in his possession, at the time he is hunting, ready to be displayed if called for. A penalty of from $50 to $200 is provided for one who hunts and has no license at all. Game wardens are to be appointed in every county and more than one in any county where it may be deemed necessary. The law does not provide that any license must be secured by fishermen, and they may fish free.

Teachers Thoroughly Aroused.

Officers of the Kentucky Educational Association report that the teachers of the State have been aroused as never before over the annual session of the Association which is to be held this year in Louisville. Exceptionally low railroad rates have been made from every point in the State on account of the convention and an attendance of not less than 3,000 teachers is anticipated. A special invitation has been given to the school trustees and members of boards of education to attend and aid the educators in efforts to improve Kentucky's school system. Numerous speakers of national prominence are to deliver addresses. One of the pleasing features will be an exhibit from rural and city schools. This will cover everything from examples of the handwork of the manual training students to exhibits from the boys' club clubs.

Supt. Edgar C. Riley and wife, Prof. E. L. Dix and wife, Howard H. Hays and wife, Mrs. J. M. Roberts and Estelle Huby left Burlington, Monday, to attend the State Educational Association now in session in Louisville. Both have a delegation of at least twenty attending the association, while heretofore there never has been to exceed two from this county present at any of the meetings.

Burlington base ball team will play at Bellevue next Saturday and the same teams will play at the Burlington park on Monday, July 1st, county court day.

WASHINGTON NEWS.

Washington, June 18.—Is the beef trust bigger than the United States government?

Made bold by its victory, after a nine years' delay in the courts, in the famous "beef trust" suit started against it by former president Roosevelt, this trust has boosted meat prices to the highest figure ever known in this country, not even excepting a war time. The trust gives a "shortage in the live stock supply" as its reason for increasing prices.

That this excuse is only a subterfuge is shown by the last report of the government bureau of statistics, which shows that instead of a shortage in the live stock supply, there has been a steady increase.

The supply of cattle at the seven principal western markets in April is the last decade, this report says. "The number of cattle shipped to these markets last month was greater for the same month a year ago 13 per cent, and greater than the same period for 1910 by 40 per cent. There was a proportionate increase in the supply of hogs and sheep, also, and that the weight of these animals was up to the standard of former years is indicated by the fact that the supply of dressed meat now on hand in the packers' warehouses is greatly in excess of the amount held there last year."

This report shows that the beef trust has made up its mind to force the consumer to pay the cost of the nine years' suit it has just run. All the big fees paid out to lawyers for keeping the trust magnates out of the penitentiary will be taken from the purses of the consumers. Nothing must interfere with the trust's dividends!

Has Her House In Order.

Preparatory to caring for visitors during the Democratic national convention, Baltimore has been putting her house in order for three months, and the city is spick and span and ready for callers.

Many of the streets leading from the convention hall to the railroad stations have been repaved. The street railway company has laid special tracks and loops to handle the crowds and ordered sixty new cars at a cost of $300,000.

At night the stranger will have no difficulty finding his way to the convention hall. He need only gaze upward and follow any of the three great beams of light which will be focused on the Fifth Regiment Armory from three parts of the city. These searchlights will shine forth from the tops of two hotels and from the tower of a casualty company's building.

The appropriation for this special lighting is $15,000. The convention hall itself will be lit by lights, the ribs of the curving roof being outlined by 10,000 electric bulbs. The block of Bolton street leading to the main entrance of the hall will be lit with a colonnade of electric lamps on pillars 50 feet apart.

The portico of the city hall will be outlined with electric bulbs and some of the city's principal monuments will be treated in the same way.

The park department which has charge of the plant and flower decorations, has done much to beautify the exterior of the convention hall by screening the temporary doorways and stairways leading from the street to the balconies with trees and shrubs. Among the trees, high-planted for this purpose are elms and oaks some forty feet tall.

Cowpea Hay for Dairy Cows.

What about the hay crop? Will you have plenty of good forage for next winter or will you be forced to fall back on straw or crab grass hay? Cows cannot maintain their milk yields unless fed liberally of right kinds of feeds. These feeds must contain a relatively large amount of protein. This is furnished most cheaply in forage. It is not found in sufficient quantities for milk cows in timothy, prairie grass, crab grass, sorghum, or straw, but is found in cowpea, soy bean, alfalfa or clover hay.

Cowpea hay has about the same feeding value as alfalfa and is some better, than clover. Cowpeas can be sown under wheat or oats, and will generally mature enough to cut for hay before frost. As soon as the crop which they are to follow is removed the stubble land should be double plowed and then harrowed to make the best possible seed bed. The seedling can be done with an ordinary grain drill using the cut cup wide open. This will sow at the rate of 4 or 5 pecks to the acre.

It is best to cut the peas for hay when the first pod ripen, shocking them in narrow rows, shocks the day after cutting and allowing to cure in the shock for a couple of weeks. With favorable weather the hay will be ready to bale, stack or mow away at the end of that time. Rains do not harm the hay very much when in the shock.

On average soil sown as indicated above in an average season, cowpea hay makes about a ton per acre. Farmers with dairy cows or any other live stock should sow as much as possible on stubble or any other vacant lands. Now is the time to get ready to sow.

A sprained ankle may as a rule be cured in from three to four days by applying Chamberlain's liniment and observing the directions on the bottle. For sale—18 months old Jersey bull calf. Apply to Bud Goodridge, Burlington.

W. M. RACHAL & CO., UNION, KENTUCKY.

An Important Business Statement.

The statement of several principal men in the Beef Trust as to the increase of 10,000,000 in the population of the United States in the last ten years, or 20 per cent addition to the number of consumers, and but two people in the same period, is worthy of the most careful consideration when the higher cost of beef is under thought or discussion.

It brings into the very strongest possible light the necessity of enlarging the number of cattle in the country, if our population is to enjoy the supplies of beef in the households of past years, and failing to do this means a continuance of the extreme high prices and a consequent reduction in the quantity and quality of the meat supply of the masses of our people.

In considering nearly every source of food supply it will be well to bear this increase in the number of consumers fully in mind, and for those persons engaged in agriculture or in the promotion of agricultural interests to plan and prepare for the enormous greater demand for provisions for the households that is so assured to present itself.

It is not only in the matter of food supplies that this steady growth of our population is a strongly stimulating business but it is in constant operation in nearly every phase of our financial, commercial and industrial work, and in the majority of instances this increasing population is benefitting conditions.

The 16,000,000 of population added in the past 10 years has created greater demand for land in the country and realty in the cities and towns and their suburbs.

This increase has given consumers to the manufacturers and the farmers, customers to the merchants, the shopkeepers and the distributors of outputs and products.

It has helped the bankers, the physicians and the attorneys without doubt, and in brief it is but logical to say it has contributed its full ratio, 20 per cent, to the aggregate business of the United States.

The next 10 years fully as great a number of persons will probably be added to our census rolls and this means still greater demand for the products of fields and farms, still greater need of the outputs of our mines and factories, still larger trade for our merchants, shopkeepers and dealers, and it should mean a greater degree of prosperity to the entire population of the nation.

If the statement of the packers emphasizes the need of more cattle, it also in its reference to the increased population carries with it great encouragement as to the development of our country and its trade.—Enquirer.

HOW TO COOK HUSBANDS.

A Recipe. Whereby They Are Rendered Digestible and Agreeable.

"Many husbands are spoiled by mismanagement. Some women go about it as if their husbands were balloons, and blow them up; others keep them constantly in hot water; others let them freeze by their carelessness and indifference. Some keep them in a stew by irritating ways and words; others roast them; some keep them in pickle all their lives. Now it is not to be supposed that any husband will be good, managed in this way, turns out well; onions wouldn't be good, but they are really delicious when properly treated."

"In selecting your husband you should not be guided by the ill-very appearance as in buying mackerel, or by the golden tint, as if you wanted salmon. Be sure to select him yourself, as taste differs. And by the way, if you go to market for him, as the best are always brought to your door."

"It is far better to have none, unless you patiently learn to cook, than to have a kettle of the finest porcelain in the best but if you have nothing but an earthenware pickin it will do, with care."

"See that the linen in which you wrap him is nicely washed and mended, with the required amount of buttons and strings, and the him in the nicely served on. The him in the kettle with a strong cord called Comfort, as the one called Duty is apt to be weak. They sometimes fly out of the kettle, and become burned and crusty on the edges, since, like crabs and oysters, you have to cook them alive."

"Make a clear, strong steady fire out of Love, Neatness and Cheerfulness. Set him as near this as seems to agree with him. He sputters and fizzes, don't be anxious, as your husband this till they are quite done. Add a little sugar, in the form of what confectioners call Kisses; but no vinegar or pepper on any day. A little spice improves them, but it must be used with judgment."

"Don't stick a sharp instrument into him, to see if he is becoming tender. Stir him gently, watching the while lest he should pop. 'Explosion of soap' ool oq so become lost and useless."

"You cannot fail to know when he is done. If thus treated you will find him very digestible, and agreeing, nicely with you and the children."

Some person took a package from Mr. Lively's mail box on rural route, one day last week. The party who took the package is guilty of a very serious offense and if Uncle Sam apprehends him he will be given considerable trouble and likely will draw a term in prison.

CONGRESSMAN ROUSE.

Busy Looking After The Interest of His Constituents.

Prof. Dix received the following from Congressman Rouse a few days since:

"I have just had a talk with Mr. D. J. Crosby, Chief of the Agricultural Experiment Station and the Department of Agriculture, and told him that your High School was in need of many things connected with your experimental station work and he will correspond with you as to your wants and will help in some way. I told him of your work the past year and that your school was the first one in Kentucky to take such steps and I hoped that the Department would be able to give all the encouragement possible. You will likely hear from him this week and I will as you know be glad to do anything here that I can."

As a result of Congressman Rouse's interview with Mr. D. J. Crosby, Prof. Dix received the following under date of June 12:

"Prof. E. L. Dix, Burlington, Ky.
"Dear Sir:—In a conversation this morning with Congressman Rouse, he stated that you are at the head of a new high school which is endeavoring to be of the greatest possible service to the community thru the teaching of agriculture and carrying on other work that will be of direct assistance to the pupils in their preparation for life work. He requested that I communicate with you and render whatever assistance is possible from this Department, which I am glad to do."

"You will understand that we have no appropriation which enables us to give direct financial assistance, but I shall be glad to furnish whatever publications I can and give such advice and assistance as the office affords. I am enclosing a list of apparatus and supplies that a high school should have in order to teach agriculture to the best advantage. In the beginning I presume you will find it impossible to secure more than a small part of the apparatus here suggested, but with a plan for future development definitely before you it will probably be possible to purchase more wisely than otherwise. Before securing apparatus for the teaching of agriculture, it would be well to write to the Central Scientific Co., of Chicago, for their catalogue of apparatus, this being about the only company in this country giving special attention to apparatus for agricultural purposes."

"Standard sets of seeds, grasses, cereals in the head, and other agronomy specimens can be procured from the College of Agriculture, Burlington, at a reasonable cost."

"I am sending you several publications that I think you will find of interest. Particularly one entitled Community Work in the Rural High School, which describes several useful features of High School extension work. If this office can be of any further service to you I shall be glad to learn of your needs and to do what I can to supply them or to put you in touch with people who can be of direct assistance."

Deep cultivation of corn is not in any way an insurance that the yield will be good, in fact, it is a sure way to ruin it.

It is injurious to corn. The feeding roots as a usual thing grow close to the surface and deep cultivation kills them and these roots to such an extent as to decrease the yield of corn. After the first time over shallow cultivation will give the best results.

An earnest effort will be made in this county to enforce the compulsory educational law, and parents who fail to send their children to school as the law requires will be reported to the county superintendent of schools who the law requires to have the parent summoned to appear before the county judge to show cause why the child is not attending school, and in the event of a good excuse for the child's failure to attend school is not forthcoming the parent will be fined. This failure of the new school law will be very unpopular for a while with some parents.

The New Hunting Law.

The new hunting law went into effect on the 15th inst. and everyone who hunts must have a license.

From this County Clerk we can go into the field, the license being good in any county in the state for one year. The annual fee is $1 for each license. The County Clerk receives 15 cents for each license issued, and the remainder of the money goes to the state treasury, where it is kept separate from other money in what is known as a fish and game fund. The license fee for non-residents of the state or aliens is $15 a year. The law provides, however, that a man or any member of his family may hunt on his own premises without a license. Under the new law, a penalty of from $1 to $25 may be imposed by the court on a person hunting without a license in his possession, at the time he is hunting, ready to be displayed if called for. A penalty of from $50 to $200 is provided for one who hunts and has no license at all. Game wardens are to be appointed in every county and more than one in any county where it may be deemed necessary. The law does not provide that any license may be secured by fishermen, and they may fish free.

Teachers Thoroughly Aroused.

Officers of the Kentucky Educational Association report that the teachers of the state have been aroused as never before over the annual session of the Association which is to be held this year in Louisville. Exceptionally low railroad rates have been made from every point in the State on account of the convention and attendance of not less than 3,000 teachers is anticipated. A special invitation has been given to the school trustees and members of boards of education to attend and aid the educators in efforts to improve Kentucky's school system. Numerous speakers of national prominence are on the program. One of the pleasing features will be an exhibit from rural and city schools. This will cover everything from examples of the handwork of the manual training students to exhibits from the boys' corn clubs.

Supt. Edgar C. Riley and wife, Prof. E. L. Dix and wife, Howard

TO KEEP IN STEP

Who Falls Behind Is Who Fails.

Misfortune invariably overtakes the One Who Does Not Keep Step With His Fellows.

In a little magazine that came recently to the editor's hands, was a story about a boy scout, who when he first began to drill, was unable to keep in step with his comrades. He was in a rear rank and attracted the attention of a subordinate officer who said what he could do to drill him the rhythm of marching, failing in his attempt he suggested that the boy be placed in the front rank where he would come under the attention of the commanding officer; and this was the result finally that the boy kept perfect step and alignment. He not only received the personal attention of the commanding officer, but he put forth the very best effort of which he was capable to overcome his deficiency.

The reading of this story suggested a train of thought that led to our schools, our workshops and mercantile establishments. According to statistics there are in our public schools at least five boys out of every hundred who are deficient in their studies; that is, who fail to keep step with the majority of their fellows. In our workshops there are ten out of every hundred apprentices who, try as hard as they may, apparently fail to keep up with the knowledge of the trades in the same time that the other 90 did. In our mercantile establishments there is still a larger percentage of failures. The result of all this is that there is discouragement in our schools and the commonplace in our trades and vocations.

If now the teachers in the schools would give the same attention to delinquent pupils that the officers give this boy scout company; if the foremen of our work shops and the superintendents of our mercantile establishments would give individual training to those whom they see are not making the progress that they should, there would be supplied that incentive that is apparently needed for the boy and the young man to make personal effort to keep in step with his fellows.

But whether they do or not, the boy or young man who finds himself out of step in school, in the work shop or in the store, ought if he have the right stuff in him to make extraordinary effort if need be, to get into step and to stay there; and he will do so if he appreciate the necessity of keeping in step.

General Forrest once told his men when they were sweeping across the country, that danger lay behind, not ahead; in other words, that the straggler was more likely to be captured by the enemy than the man in the front rank to be shot down. This is true in every activity of life. The man who does not keep in step with the fellow who falls behind, is invariably the man to be overtaken with misfortune.—R.

FARMERS

Should Study the Reports Sent Out By The U. S. Department of Agriculture.

Few farmers realize the importance of studying the reports sent out by the U. S. Department of Agriculture in making their plans for the future. It seems that the old habits cling to us, and we year after year or plant corn, oats, wheat barley, etc., without any special concern regarding what the future price may be as based upon the supply carried over from the year before. This method of farming certainly does not show a practical application of business principles to agriculture. There are reasons, perhaps, for this indifference in planning our farming operations. Farm lands have been increasing in value very rapidly, also farm products, and it has not been necessary for the farmer to figure as closely as the business man in order to make a profit on his products, nevertheless the man who does meet with the greatest success. Very few, and perhaps no other line of business could be engaged in successfully without a careful study of the conditions of that business. Just recently, the writer knew of a case where a coal dealer had planned to go into business for himself the first of March, but after he had resigned his position he began studying conditions and found that a coal strike was inevitable. A strike of this kind, to a man just starting in business, would be extremely disastrous and probably result in failure—a fate which this man avoided by studying conditions.

Every farmer should study carefully the reports, facts and figures sent out by the U. S. Department of Agriculture. We find in going over the records that the farm value of $140,000,000 for hay in 1911 was higher than has ever occurred before in the history of the U. S. Department of Agriculture. At no other time, excepting in 1871, did the price anywhere near approach the price for 1911. At that time it was $14.50 per ton on the farm.

Onions furnish the most substantial cure for nervous prostration and all other nerve disorders. They have a soothing effect on the system, and are excellent for colds, coughs and croup. They have been known to cure cases of prostration of insomnias.

FATTENING VALUE OF PEAS

Use With Care—Is Unexcelled—Make Good Food for Horses at Work.

(By PROF. THOMAS N. SHAW.) There is no kind of live stock on the farm to which peas cannot be fed with positive advantage when they are to be had at prices not too high. They are not commonly fed to horses, since they can seldom be spared for such a use, but they make a good food for horses at work, and for colts during the period of development, if given as a part of the grain food.

As a food for fattening cattle, peas are probably unexcelled. Much of the success which Canadian feeders have achieved in preparing cattle for the market has risen from the free use of peas in the diet.

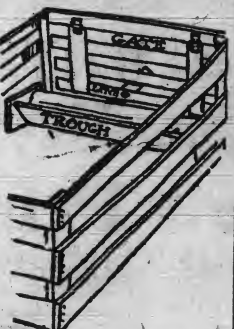

During the first part of the finishing period they will be found peculiarly helpful in making beef, owing to their relative richness in protein, but they are also a satisfactory food at any stage of the fattening process. During the first half of the finishing period peas will be found superior to corn, but toward the close of the same, corn could probably be fed with greater relative advantage.

Peas with oats or bran make an excellent grain food for cattle that are being fattened. Speaking in a general way, peas should form about one-third, by weight, of the meal fed, but, as every feeder knows, the relative proportions of meal used should vary somewhat as the season of fattening progresses.

ends, writes N. S. Shaw, Missouri Valley Farmer. Make the trough and nail securely to the bottom board at one end of pen. Instead of boarding up the pen tight at the trough end leave an open space the length of trough, with a board across top and bottom, then make a gate and hinge to the top board on the inside. Take a short length of stout wood for a latch and bolt to the second board of gate, with one bolt. When you open the trough turn the latch until it meshes the trough, push the gate in till latch is beyond trough, then turn latch to upright position again. The hogs cannot bother you while you are cleaning the trough or pouring in the feed.

LIVE STOCK NOTES

A hog simply will not be responsible for poor fences.

There is no better place to raise pigs than in a good pasture.

Even the hog like a variety of feed and will do better if they can get it. There is no animal that responds so quickly to good feed and treatment as the pig.

How much per bushel can be made from wheat by feeding to hogs? In what way would it be fed?

Almost every wrong act of the horse is caused by fear, excitement or mismanagement, said a great horseman. The individuality of each horse should be studied, and the feeds supplied to meet individual requirements. Feed roughage to the stock before giving them grain, as it invigorates and excites the digestive apparatus to action.

The pure-bred sire and a dam of the same type of as good blood as it is possible to get will usually bring a desirable colt.

Be sure to have some disinfectant to use on the young colt's navel when he arrives. A half minute at this time may save the colt later.

In eight years out of ten the hog feeder will make money, in one year he will lose and in one break even. This is the year of the even break.

Twenty acres of corn put into a silo is said to be worth more than 30 acres put in the crib. This is quite an item, especially when feed is so high.

Begin to break the colt early if you would have an easy time with the work and a well-broken horse. A two-year-old is easier to break than a four-year-old.

When pure-bred swine are kept for breeding purposes they should be given an every opportunity for food and muscle development, rather than the production of fat.

WHY TROYS CARRY MORE

than any other make of the same size

- 1—A TROY is bigger at the mouth than any other wagon. Look at the points marked "A". Then figure for yourself where the biggest strain comes. It's at the mouth of the skains.
 - 2—A TROY 3 in. skains really measures 3 1/2 in. at the collar. See point marked "B". That makes the TROY a full size larger all the way through—axles, wheels, etc. Don't you want that added margin of safety?
 - 3—The skains are oval, not round. See "A" again. Therefore they take in the full strength of the axles—just where the strength is needed most.
 - 4—TROY axles are strictly carved, first-quality hickory. No other timber has the same carrying strength or resiliency.
- This is just an axle and skain talk. These things count—but they aren't all. We want you to know the TROY all over—its tongue to tail-board. Come in and let us show you why the TROY is the one best from every angle. You will like the price too—it's right.

One of our subscribers writes us asking what effect growing pumpkins in a corn field would have upon the crop. As far as using up plant food that would otherwise be used by the corn, or in some other such way causing a reduction in the corn yield, the pumpkins would make very little material difference. It is not the yield that is effected so much as the objection comes when the vines interfere with the cultivation and harvesting of the corn crop. The practice recommended by many who grow a great many pumpkins is to reserve a small space of ground for pumpkins exclusively. It will be surprising can be grown on a small piece of ground. A great many, however, grow pumpkins in the corn, but where it is possible we think it would be advisable to grow them separate.—Indiana Farmer.

Harvesting, orchard grass, rye and barley has been in progress the past week. These crops are fairly good. The wheat crop is short and as an average will be hardly worth cutting. Conditions have so changed in recent years as to make wheat not a very profitable crop, and many farmers are quitting it entirely. For several years past the wheat crop has encountered weather conditions that have shortened it over half, so that the average yield has been greatly cut down. This used to be one of the most profitable crops in the county, but not of late years.—Blue Grass Clipper.

HOUSE FOR THE FARM FLOCK

Material Used Does Not Figure as Much in Economy as Shape Allowing Use of All Room.

It is not so much the materials that enter into the construction of a poultry house that means economy as it is the style or shape that allows for making use of every inch of room. The house shown in the accompanying plans is economical in cost, will take charge of a good-sized flock of hens and allow for additions to be put on from time to time as the flock is increased, writes Thomas F. Maher of New York in the Farm and Home.

The roosting room is placed in the central part of the house and the roosts are in such a position that no drafts can possibly reach the hens. The ventilator, with openings close to the floor, tends to draw the fresh air from the windows toward the roosts and carries impure air out, while an abundance of fresh air is around the hens.

For a foundation brick or concrete can be used, but for cheapness the metal can be used and the house built on posts. In this case it is advisable to use a double floor. Before nailing the flooring it is a good plan to tack wire netting on the beams to prevent rats from gnawing through.

The house is 27 feet 6 inches long and 18 feet wide. The following bill of material will give the principal Floor Plan.

Items needed to construct it. In the case of window frames, for instance, a saving can be made by boring in the openings and having the sash strike against a strip tacked on the frame thus made. 145 2x4's 10 feet, 15 2x4's 24 feet for rafters, 550 1x2's, 100 2x4's 24 feet for inside sheathing, 6 rolls roofing, 22 2x6's 10 feet, 1 bearing beam 20 feet long 4x6, 700 feet roofing boards, 40 linear feet 3/4x4 for door jambs, 4 doors 2-6x6's, 1 door frame and outside door 2-6x6's, 3 window frames with storm sash to fit, 3 barn sash 20x24 inches, 32 linear feet 1x4's for corner boards.

POULTRY NOTES

The lazy hen is seldom the profitable hen.

Desirable eggs are said to weigh about 24 ounces to the dozen.

It is as an egg producer that the Indian Runner duck has gained the most fame.

On every farm poultry should not only have a place, but a prominent place.

The Indian Runner duck is not inclined to fatten so readily as other varieties.

Rigid culling is absolutely necessary if you would keep the flock in the best shape.

Ducks as a rule are hardy. They do not have spleens. The weakest part of a duck is its legs.

In case some of the cockerels need to be eaten or sold on a fancy market it pays to put them in a crate and fatten them for two weeks.

As an article of diet, if provided by a competent chef, the green duck resembles the famous and fast disappearing canvas back duck.

For hens that have learned to eat their own eggs a shell filled with mustard, aloes, or red pepper will help to break up the unfortunate habit.

Turkey eggs may be hatched in the incubator very nicely, but unless you have a number of hens it is hard to get enough fresh eggs to fill a machine.

The meat of yarded poultry is always more tender than that of fowls having free range, due to the extreme muscular development of the latter.

It requires about four geese to make a pound of feathers. Picking live geese for their feathers is a practice that has been discontinued in this country.

It is estimated that it requires the feathers from about ten ducks to make a pound. The sale of which just about pays the cost of dressing the fowls for market.

A plant of Swiss chard sown adjoining the poultry yard will supply greens all summer, provided the fowls are not allowed to eat it more than an hour a day.

POULTRY

KEEPING LICE FROM POULTRY

Maine Experiment Station Bulletin. Recommends Simple and Quits Inexpensive Treatment.

One of the difficult and trying problems of the poultry keeper is to keep his poultry houses and stock free from lice, mites, etc. There are many proprietary preparations on the market to combat these, most of which work satisfactorily. However, they are more or less expensive. The Maine experiment station has just issued a bulletin on the subject and recommends a treatment which appears to be fully as simple as anything else, and much less expensive. The powder made by the station at a cost of only a few cents a pound is as follows: Take three parts of gasoline and one part of crude carbolic acid. Mix them together. Add gradually, while stirring, enough plaster of paris to take up all the moisture. The liquid and dry plaster should be thoroughly mixed and stirred so the liquid will be uniformly mixed through the plaster. When enough has been added, the resulting mixture should be a dry, pinkish-brown powder, having a strong carbolic odor and a rather less pronounced gasoline odor. Be sure that the crude carbolic acid is secured. If a spray is desired instead of the powder, simply take three parts of kerosene and one part of crude carbolic acid. If birds are infested with lice the best way to get rid of them is to use the powder, which is to be worked into the feathers. Remember, a single application will not be sufficient, because where there are lice present there are also unhatched eggs or nits. Make a second application four days to a week after the first, and if it is a bad case a third application may be necessary.

PLYMOUTH ROCK IS POPULAR

More of Breed Found on Farms Than Any Other on Account of Blocky Shape—Wyandottes Next.

The Barred Plymouth Rock is without a doubt the most popular breed of chickens in this country—more of them are found on the farms than any other breed. On special poultry farms the Leghorns is a very popular breed, and in the poultry farming districts the Rhode Island Reds are almost exclusively used, says a writer in the Rural New Yorker. As a general utility fowl the Wyandottes are second in popularity to the Rocks, the variety being the most popular. Their blocky shape makes them an excellent breed for broilers. Like the Plymouth Rocks and Rhode Island Reds, they lay a brown egg. The Leghorns lay a white egg and in this respect they have a slight advantage, as most markets prefer the white egg, though there is no difference in the qualities of eggs with brown or a white shell.

SEPARATING YOUNG AND OLD

Pullets Need Plenty of Fresh Forming Food, Such as Barley, With Less Fattening Feeds.

Young chickens, like young people, have more or less timidity and therefore it is not well to run young and old together, at least it is much better to have them separate if you can well do so. Then again the pullets are still growing and they need plenty of fresh forming feed, such as barley, bone, meat with less of fattening foods. The hen should not be deprived of these either, but she can get along on less, as what you give her will not be taken away from the purpose for which you intended it, as in the case with the pullet, which not only needs these things for making the egg, but to go toward the development of her body. It is not well to have, too, that the developed bird will require less feed than the pullet, and because the pullet is somewhat timid she is likely not to get enough, or even her share. The young will feed more free among themselves and if you can possibly do so, keep them to themselves.

Green Feeding Worth While.

If the best results are to be obtained with poultry they must be furnished plenty of green feed, is a statement so often heard that its repetition seems silly; yet there are flocks on fairly prosperous farms where one would think the practice of regular green feeding had never been heard of.

The streets of Walton have received a liberal dressing of oil this week, and the question of oil is settled for the season. This is the third time that the Walton streets have been oiled and the results have been so very satisfactory that the people contributed more liberally this year than at any time heretofore. It required more money on account of the advance price in the oil, and the oil and "service" cost the town about $425.00, which was obtained by subscriptions from the purses of the citizens. S. W. Beavly, the clever town councilman, John C. Miller and his son Fred, who very kindly looked after the details of getting the money and arranging for the oiling of the streets.

The Equitable Bank and Trust Company as the assignee of the Richmond Deposit Bank, has the deposits of the defunct bank, the last twenty-five percent of the deposits being paid out on Wednesday, making a full one hundred percent of the amount due the depositors. This is a remarkable showing considering the condition of the affairs of the Richmond bank when the assignee took hold, there being only about $300 in cash on hand, and over $18,000 deposits to be paid out of nearly $5,000 overdrafts and notes due to the bank to be collected to care for the depositors' accounts. It was a difficult matter to accomplish, and only the best kind of business sagacity and persistence coupled with patience, rewarded the efforts. As this will wind up all the indebtedness of the bank of the assignee will soon be arranged so as to make a final settlement.

W. D. The bride is very popular and pretty and has a host of friends. The groom is a brother of Attorney Joel H. Ward on the Q. & C. Railroad. After the ceremony the happy young couple were hurried to the Pennsylvania Hotel, where they will spend two weeks and will then return to their many friends, their home, much joy and prosperity. On Monday of last week the bride was given a miscellaneous attended. Some beautiful presents were given, consisting of twenty-six pieces of silver, cut glass, beautiful and useful, and other articles were served and a pleasant evening was spent.

The members of Walton Lodge, F. and A. M., to the number of about thirty, had one of the most enjoyable visits to Cincinnati last Saturday where, the members of Walton lodge had been invited by Yeatman Lodge No. 112, F. and A. M., to participate in the work in the Masonic degree and exemplify that degree as conferred in the true Kentucky style. Yeatman lodge had four candidates for the lodge degree, and among that number was G. Wesley Murphy formerly of Walton, and he was designated as the "victim" for the Walton team. The Masonic temple is situated in the east end of Delta and Columbia streets, and is a beautiful structure, being owned by the Yeatman lodge, the lower story comprising offices of the lodge and the banquet room, and the upper story to the lodge room and its auxiliary rooms. The work of conferring the degree began Saturday at about four o'clock. Yeatman lodge doing the work on three of the candidates, having a different team for each candidate, showing well skilled in the work and that any number of the members could do it in a most creditable manner. The work of the Yeatman lodge was particularly praiseworthy because of the uniformity of the degree with which the members taking part had a full comprehension of the features of the masonry and besides a perfect grasp in detail, its correctness in language, and the delineation of the respective characters, the ceremonial features were faithfully executed in a smooth, dignified manner that produced a most impressive impression. The accompaniment by the organ in the various parts added to the impressive parts because the selections were good and the organist was skillful and comprehended just what to play in each detail. The somewhat different from the Kentucky work, but both have the "ancient landmarks of the craft" clearly akin, that the difference is only in detail. The Walton team closed the work of evening in the conferring of the degree, and their efforts appeared to be very pleasing to the brethren and was warmly commended. Modesty restrains any very extended comment on the work of the Walton brethren, but in justice to them we can truthfully say that it was "good work, true work," and above the average to be witnessed in a lodge. Prior to the conferring of the second section on Bro. Murphy the members were invited to the banquet hall where a nice spread was served, and a few little talks indulged in. The refreshments were particularly appetizing and well served. Cigars followed and in an short time the work was resumed. But the conclusion of the degree work, which was in charge of Bro. J. G. Slater, acting as Master, Bro. Jno. L. Vent delivered the lecture in a most pleasing manner, being assisted by Bro. R. D. Stamler and his stereoscopic views, the lecture lasting nearly an hour, and containing some very beautiful and new thoughts. Each candidate was presented with a handsome masonic emblem by an admiring brother, the gift coming from some near and dear one. It was about ten o'clock when in order to begin the train home, but it was "low twelve" before the members finally dispersed. The lodge has about one to twenty members, and they represent the cream of the good citizenship of that part of the Queen City. The Walton visitors not only consider them a lot of fine gentlemen, but a band of brothers whom they were delighted to meet and fraternize with, and hope to have the pleasure of a visit from them at Walton at no far distant date.

GRANT R. D. No. 1.

The Bellevue High school team played the reorganized Beanes at the park here Saturday, a 12 inning game and believe me it was some ball game to it. It was a pitchers' battle all the way with Huey and Rogers, both in fine form. Until the 8th inning neither side had been able to score. The home plate, but in Burlington's 9th inning, was on a fly, Clure got first on an error. White knocked one close to the foul line for two bags, scoring Clure. Slayback then scored on a fielding error. The locals in their half of the ninth scored two. W. Clure got a single, Deck was out on a fly, Ryle got a two bagger, scoring Clure. Clure then sacrificed, Ryle going to second, Lansing sent a grass cutter for two bags, scoring Ryle. Clure now even and pandemonium broke loose. No more runs for either side until the 12th, when Smith, first man up, for Burlington struck out. Slayback got first on a wild throw of a grounder to third. Clure got first same way forcing Slayback. White was out on a fly, Clure hit to Clure who scored. The first baseman took care of Hager's grounder. The first man up for Bellevue got first on an error but was out trying to puffer second. Lansing and Lacy were each thrown out at first on easy grounders. Score 3 to 2 in favor of Burlington.

Hit Bellevue, 7, Burlington 7, struck out by Rogers 10, Huey 9, hit by pitcher Huey 1; Wild pitcher Huey 3; Umpires Cook and Smith.

Don't forget to come to Bellevue July 4th, when Aurora plays a double header here. Hot fish and coffee and other refreshments served to the crowd on the grounds. Games called at 10 a. m. and 3 p. m.

Gov. Woodrow Wilson, of New Jersey, Nominated For President at the Baltimore Convention On the 46th Ballot—Gov. Thomas R. Marshall, of Indiana, Nominated For Vice-President

After One of the Most Momentous Contests In The History of the Democratic Party Since 1860.

After being in session one week and a few hours Clark and Underwood withdrew and Woodrow Wilson, of New Jersey, was nominated for President by the National Democratic Convention at Baltimore. In the next few weeks the voters will begin to settle down and the political prophets can begin sending out their election forecasts. FARM AND BEES

MUCH PLEASURE FROM BEES

Care of Honey-Makers Extremely Fascinating to Many People and Returns Substantial Profit.

(By E. F. PHILLIPS.)

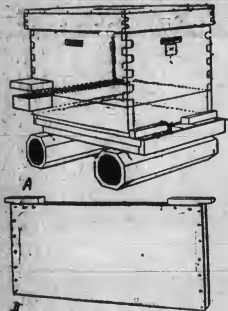

Beekeeping is extremely fascinating to the majority of people as a pastime, furnishing outdoor exercise as well as intimacy with an insect whose activity has been a subject of absorbing study from the earliest times. It has the advantage of being a recreation which pays its own way and often produces no mean profit.

The location of the hives is a matter of considerable importance. As a rule it is better for hives to face away from the prevailing wind and be protected from high winds. In the north, a south slope is desirable. It is advisable for hives to be so placed that the sun will strike them early in the morning, so that the bees become active early in the day, and thus gain an advantage by getting the first supply of nectar. It is also advantageous to have the hives shaded during the hottest part of the day, so that the bees will not hang out in front of the hive instead of working. They should be so placed that the bees will not prove a nuisance to passers-by or disturb the stock. This latter precaution may save the beekeeper considerable trouble, for bees sometimes prove dangerous, especially to horses.

A, Feeder set in collar under hive body. B, Division board feeder to be hung in hive in place of frame.

The plot on which the hives are placed should be kept free from weeds, especially in front of the entrances. The grass may be cut with a lawn mower, but it will often be found more convenient and as efficient to pasture one or more head of sheep in the apiary inclosure. The hives should be far enough apart to permit of free manipulation. If hives are too close together there is danger of bees entering the wrong hive on returning.

These conditions, which may be considered as ideal, need not all be followed. When necessary bees may be kept on house tops, in the back part of city lots, in the woods, or in many other places where the ideal conditions are not found. As a matter of fact, few apiaries are perfectly located; nevertheless the location should be carefully planned, especially when a large number of colonies are kept primarily for profit.

Danger in the Hay Fork.

Never throw down the forks in any old place for the stock to step on. Nail a strip of board across the corner in some handy place, and stand all the forks behind it. Then you know where to find them, and nothing can run against them or step on them.

A Most Valuable Tool.

The manure spreader should be the most generally used tool on the farm, but this is no reason why it should be left unprotected in the storms and wintered in the snow bank. A shed for the spreader would be the best economy.

Sowing Radish Seeds.

Sow radish seeds in the same row with slow germinating seeds. They come up in a few days and mark the rows for cultivation.

BEES ARE QUITE PROFITABLE

Only Producers Known to Husbandry That Yield Profit Without the Cost of Feed.

If people knew what a great source of profit is found in the keeping of bees and how interesting the work, there would not be an unused square foot of ground on any farm in the United States.

Bees are the only producers known to husbandry that yield a profit without cost of feed. They find their own pasturage. They multiply so rapidly that they more than pay for the small initial expense of housing them, and the first cost of equipment is almost trifling.

Bee culture may be made profitable by the children of the farm, or by the women members of the family. It may be carried on successfully in conjunction with the keeping of poultry or the growing of fruit. In the latter case apiculture is found to be a great help toward more home and better fruit.

Bees are little trouble and require only occasional attention. They are easily handled and readily controlled. Best of all, they give a real service in hard cash and that counts most on the farm.

HANDY IMPLEMENT FOR FARM

One-Horse Dump Cart Is Not Hard to Construct and Material Costs Comparatively Little.

The cart is one of the handiest tools I have on the farm, writes an Ohio man in the Practical Farmer. I made the bed 25 inches wide, 10 inches high and 42 inches long. I used 10-inch strap hinges to hinge bed on to back end of shafts. Drilled the holes larger and bolted shaft on. The two bolts were made of wood 10 inches long and 3 inches wide, bolted on to the shafts so as to turn round when bed is down and catch the end of the bed in front. I used for wheels a pair of drill wheels three feet high.

This cart I use every day to haul manure from ten cows. This bed will hold all of it, and makes a good one-horse load. It is handy for hauling and dumping anything that one horse can pull. My cow stable is so close behind the cows that I cannot get a manure spreader in, so I had to invent this cart. It is not hard to construct, and it is not expensive to make.

DYNAMITE OUT THE STUMPS

Result Given of Experiment Made by Kentucky Agricultural Station—Cost of Material.

Over 100 stumps having an average diameter of 16 inches were blown in Kentucky agricultural experiments at London. The average number of sticks of dynamite used was 2.6, the average time required per stump 30 minutes, the average cost of material 25.7 cents, and the average total cost per stump 33 cents. Nearly all the stumps were dead oak. At the experiment station farm at Lexington nine green stumps averaging 22 inches in diameter were blown at an average cost of $1.56 per stump, 10-13 sticks of dynamite per stump being used. Of these stumps three black oak averaged 45 inches in diameter, and were blown at a total cost of $3.52 per stump, the average number of sticks of dynamite used being 23-13.

The amount of dynamite required to blow stumps of the same kind in the same soil does not vary directly with the diameter, but more nearly with the square of the diameter; or, in other words, with the area of a cross section of a stump.

BEES AND FARM NOTES

Seed corn averages the poorest this year of any year ever known.

Lima beans should not be planted until the ground is warm and dry.

Why waste manure by leaching and then buy fertilizers? Build sheds when the pea crop is over, clear away the vines and plant potatoes. A disk plow is all right in its place, but its place is not in a field of sod.

Don't sow a big area to alfalfa until you have tried a small experimental patch.

Where barnyard manure is available no better fertilizer can be obtained for growing tomatoes.

Cut clover hay when about half the blossoms are brown, cut timothy just as the bloom is falling.

The tomato will not thrive upon wet soil, as it is a plant that is very intolerant of "wet feet."

To leave misadventures no mark of a good plowman. Cut all the ground and leave no hard ridges.

Make your garden so attractive that it will be talked about and put up your goods in a way that please the eye.

When using alfalfa for hog pasture, divide the field into three lots, using one in early spring, one in summer and the third in fall.

Considering how easily lima beans may be grown and what a fine vegetable they are, it is surprising how few gardens contain them.

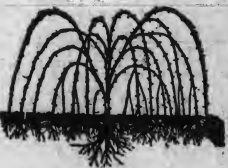

HORTICULTURE

CARING FOR RASPBERRY BUSH

Old Canes Should Be Cut Out Immediately After Fruit Has Been Picked—Cultivate Often.

The red raspberry should not be summer pruned, excepting that the old canes should be cut out at once after the fruit has all been picked. In the spring the weak shoots should be removed, and not more than eight canes allowed to a plant. The best berries will be found on one-year wood, and they should not be allowed to fruit more than three years. This may be managed by using method in pruning, so that each year there will be no canes more than four years old. The red raspberry is propagated by shoots which grow up from the roots. One-year-old shoots are preferable for planting. The rows should be at least three feet apart, with the plants two feet apart in the row. Frequent and thorough cultivation is necessary to keep down the suckers which grow from the roots. It is a good plan to plow the ground between the rows every spring.

The blackcap requires summer pruning. The tips should be pinched off as soon as the shoots get to be two feet high, in order to induce side-branching. If the canes grow too long, pinch them back; allow no canes higher than six feet. In the spring re-prune, cutting out weak and excessive growth.

Black raspberries do not send up root shoots. They are propagated by burying the tips of the shoots in the ground some time in August. These take root and produce new plants, which can be transplanted the following spring. The black raspberries are more rank in their habits of growth and should be planted further apart than the red varieties. Planting every three feet apart is a good distance. They would receive thorough cultivation in the same manner as the red sorts.

GOOD SUBSTITUTE FOR POLES

Wire Makes Best Support for Beans and Other Plants, but Strong, Twisted Twine Is Good.

It is every year becoming more difficult to obtain poles for beans and plants of that kind and very often a crop is greatly reduced because of lack of proper support. Beans may be supported without poles in this manner: Stakes, from which wires or strings run, should be driven in the ground very early, so the roots of the plants will not be disturbed. The stakes should be at least eighteen inches apart in the row and the rows should be three feet apart.

Wire, of course, makes the best support, but very strong, hard-twisted twine that will not stretch in the damp weather will answer the purpose.

The supporting posts may be set at any distance apart, according to the strength of the poles supporting the wire or twine. An excellent support is a gas pipe, but of course this is too expensive for a large garden, but may be used to advantage in the average small garden.

Filling in the Orchard.

The vacant places in an orchard caused by poor stock, injury in cultivation or borers, it may be well to fill in with younger trees up to the age of about eight years. After that time the older trees will occupy the ground so fully with their root systems that young trees set make very little growth and seldom amount to much when they arrive at a bearing age.

Fertilizing the Orchard.

Barnyard manure is, in general, the best fertilizer for the orchard, says C. M. Burritt of the department of agriculture. This should be applied at the rate of a load to from three to five trees, at least once in three years. The use of commercial fertilizers is hardly advisable, except where careful experiment has demonstrated its value.

INJURY TO APPLES BY SPRAY

Orchardists Have Taken Up Sulphur Compounds to Prevent Damage to Fruit and Foliage.

The most striking thing that has taken place in apple spraying since the introduction of Bordeaux mixture for the control of apple diseases, said an official of the bureau of plant industry of the department of agriculture, recently, is the change from the copper to the sulphate compounds that has been brought about largely through the experiments of this office. The lime-sulphur solution is the leading one in use, though the self-boiled lime-sulphur and the iron sulphide are still under investigation.

The spray tunneling of the fruit by copper poisoning and the foliage injury due to the same cause has become so serious that considerable attention was devoted during the seasons of 1909 and 1910 to testing various spray mixtures. Exceptionally beautiful fruit is now raised free from fungous spots and diseases, was obtained from the experimental plots. As a result, orchardists have taken up the spraying with sulphur compounds as a solution of this important difficulty.

Some injury has occurred where mixture was used too strong or in cloudy weather. This was mostly on the tender foliage, and in hardly any case was it serious. The lime-sulphur solution, being the most convenient and satisfactory to use, has been so adopted by orchardists for spraying apples.

Where it has been combined with the arsenate of lead, generally excellent results have been obtained with the combined spray; but in a few cases, undoubtedly owing to inefficient agitation, there has been some slight burning of the fruit, and in still fewer instances, of the foliage. It is now known to be possible for the orchardists to make the lime-sulphur solution by boiling these materials on the farm, or it can be purchased on the market already prepared.

DEVICE FOR HOLDING BASKET

Ends of Strong Manila Cord of Convenient Length Fastened to Hook Supports Receptacle.

For the picking of fruits, especially apples and pears, many devices have been used, and new ones are tried every year. Doubtless the pivot-handled half-bushel basket is the most popular receptacle for fruit picked among the branches on the inside of the tree.

One difficulty with the basket is that it is awkward to handle when hung on the usual double wire hook. To obviate this difficulty the device illustrated herewith has been found effective, says the Orange Judd Farmer. Both ends of a stout manila cord of any convenient length are fastened to a hook. The cord is then passed around the basket handle and the hook thrown over a limb and caught around the now vertical cord, as shown.

The hook, while secure, can be instantly released, either from the limb or the basket, and yet they will "stay put" as long as desired.

Bees and Fruit.

Bees and fruit go well together. The bees gather honey from the blossoms and in return fertilize them. The hum of the bees in the orchard is a sign that the orchard foretells rich harvest. Under the trees is a good place for the hives.

HORTICULTURAL NOTES

The currant worm makes its appearance as soon as warm weather sets in.

Pears should not be cultivated. Best to keep them in grass after the fourth year.

Hellebore is excellent for the destruction of slugs, worms and caterpillars.

Growing grains or allowing stock to pasture in the orchard is not good orcharding.

Scout dusted on melon plants when the leaves are wet with dew discourages insects.

For most fungous and insect enemies spraying is a prevention rather than a remedy.

The presence of the currant borer may be detected by the leaves withering and turning yellow.

Tools to be used in cultivating the orchard should be determined by the kind of soil in the orchard.

Experienced growers do not pick berries for market when the fruit is wet, and they keep the crates in a cool place, out of the sun.

Surplus suckers in raspberries or red raspberry patches should be treated at just like weeds, leaving only enough shoots for next year's fruiting.

SPREAD MANURE EVERY DAY

Practice Greatly Reduces Possibility of Utilizing Elements—Cart is Handy.

A careful and intelligent use of stable manure will build up the fertility of any farm. The trouble with the average farmer is that he wastes his manure. The habit of regarding manure as valueless is one of the most expensive a farmer can have.

To properly conserve manure—the liquids as well as the solids should be collected. For this purpose it is well to have the floors of the stalls so that they will drain easily into a water-tight gutter at the rear. This gutter should be stopped at both ends, but one end should be lower than the other to allow the liquids to drain to that end.

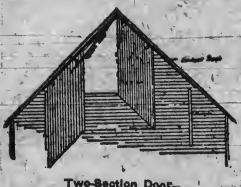

Manure should be spread every day when it is possible. This is very important, as it greatly reduces the chances of losing the fertilizing elements. In summer it can be spread on the field from which the manure has been removed, and in winter on grain fields. Newly seeded fields should not be manured.

A hand cart may be used for spreading manure. Where there are a large number of cattle or horses, a special dump cart, drawn by a single horse, may be used. Only spreading ensures that any leaching by rains shall carry the leached materials into the soil where they are wanted.

PLAN OF TWO-SECTION DOOR

One Illustrated and Described That Has Been Found Entirely Safe to Open or Shut.

We use the two-section door on our barn and have found it successful. Each section is hung on an enclosed barn door track which is bolted to the siding just under the cornice. By cutting the doors at the bottoms at the same angles as the tops we can use stay rollers to hold them in place at the bottom, thus preventing flapping by the wind. We fastened a small side pulley on the inside near the top of each door and a double swaying pulley to the first roller in the comb of the roof, writes R. Schnecke in the Farm and Home.

Two-Section Door.

Each cord through these pulleys the doors can easily be raised and lowered by one man. We have never had the least trouble with these doors and have always found them safe open or shut.

Concrete Silo.

The concrete silo which I built last year is 14 feet inside diameter and the walls 6 inches thick. It is reinforced with No. 8 wire inside. The height is 29 feet. I kept close track of all expenses and figured the men's wages for the farm laborers while on the job at $1.75 a day, says a writer in an exchange. The sand and gravel I hauled from my own sandbank. The cost was as follows: Fifty barrels cement, $63.50; labor for concreting, $115; labor on roof, $140; reinforcement, $3; bolts, $1.50; asphalt on roof, $10, or a total of $208. My silage came out in splendid condition. During this very severe winter traces of frost showed only on the sides.

GARDEN and FARM NOTES

Potatoes after alfalfa are bound to make a fine crop.

The easiest way to kill a weed is never to let it sprout.

Try this rotation: Alfalfa, potatoes, grain. It is a good one.

Hen house cleanings make the best fertilizer for the onion patch.

Wide rows and a cultivator in the garden means less hand work.

Rotation makes use of all the elements of plant food in the soil.

The best time to fight weeds is the very first day they show their heads above ground.

The surest way of getting rid of chole is to set one of the steel spring traps over their runs.

Smaller and more frequent plantings of vegetables will lengthen out the garden sabbath season.

A row of parsnips, carrots and salad plants now will come into good play next fall after frost.

Beg, borrow or buy all the wood ashes you can to use in the garden; work it well into the soil.

If blossoms appear in the newly set strawberry beds, pick them off; this will make the plants stronger.

Cut the clover when a majority of the blossoms are turning, and the alfalfa when the new shoots start from the crown.

Soil taken from a well-established alfalfa field and spread on land to be sown to alfalfa is a very good way to inoculate it.

Rotation of crops is one of the simple, practical methods of increasing the productivity of the farm and distributing labor.

The most profitable way of marketing grain and fodder is through stock. They produce manure, which is very necessary, to the soil.

POULTRY

CHICKEN COOP IS PORTABLE

Mississippi Man Invents Device of Knock-down Style—When Not in Use Takes Up Little Room.

A new form of knock-down chicken coop has been patented by a Mississippi man. When erected it forms a roomy coop and when taken down it occupies little space. The structure is of metal and consists of a bottom piece, a top piece and sides and two ends. The roof is curved to shed rain and has a handle by which the coop can be carried easily. All these parts set into each other by means of grooves and extensions. The door is a hinged flap that can be kept open or closed so that only the farmer can open it, and has vent holes in it. With this door closed the chicken or chickens are perfectly safe during the night from cats, rats or other predatory animals that roam through poultry yards and kill so many fowl.

FEED HOPPER NEVER CHOKES

Minnesota Experiment Station Recommends Device as Shown in Illustration Herewith.

A good feed hopper for grain and dry mash feeding is shown in the illustration herewith and is recommended by the Minnesota Experiment Station at Crookston. The diagram explains the advantages of this style of hopper are that it will not choke; the chickens cannot get into the feed with their feet, the feed is kept dry even outdoors, and none is wasted. The wing on each side shows the roof over the trough to keep the outside feed dry. One side of the upper roof may be hinged like a lid for filling. The gable shaped projection, running the length of the floor, allows almost every kernel of feed to be reached by the birds, thus preventing feed from getting musty from remaining in the hopper too long.

"Never Choke" Hopper.

Providing Fresh Air.

Birds are so constituted by nature that they require an abundance of fresh air for health and vigor. They never do well with a limited supply of air. For this reason all coops and boxes in which poultry of any kind is kept in the summer should be as open as possible.

Let the roof be tight to protect from rain, but let at least one side be open for the admission of fresh air at all times. The open side may be protected by wire cloth or other material that will let in the air, but keep out rats, etc.

Cleaning Up Old Nests.

The incubation season is over with poultry so far as profit to the owner is concerned, and the Minnesota experiment station advises that all old nesting material be taken out and burned and that all nesting boxes be disinfected and given a coat of liquid lye killer after which fresh straw may be placed in them for late layers. The creosote preparations sold at lumber yards for wood preserving have been used with good effect as lice killers.

Disposition of the Cripples.

The cripples and the malformed chicken should be put to death immediately after hatching. Such little unfortunates will bring nothing but disappointment. They will give you more care than ten well and whole ones. They will make you sick of the chicken business and give you entire flock a black-eye from the first kill 'em the instant they are born.

TREATING HORSE FOR WORMS

Three Excellent Remedies Given That Have Been Tried and Found Satisfactory.

This is one of the best worm destroyers for unthrifty colts and horses that we have ever tried. Mix together one pound each of sugar and salt; in this mix one-half pound of fine smoking tobacco, six ounces of powdered sulphate of iron. As a dose for a mature horse give a heaping tablespoonful in a wheat-bran mash every morning for two weeks. Colts should be given in smaller proportion to size and age.

A veterinary supply house advises the following remedy for worms in horses: Give a teaspoonful of powdered copper sulphate every morning in feed for three or four days; then give two ounces of turpentine in a pint of raw linseed oil. Feed soft feed and keep the infected animal in the stable while under treatment.

A veterinary physician, signing no name, suggests this treatment in an exchange: Clear the bowels by allowing the horse to fast over night, and give in the morning two ounces of turpentine in a pint of raw linseed oil or gruel, followed in the course of an hour with a bran mash; repeat this for two or three mornings. Santoin in half or one-ounce doses, made into powders, with linseed meal, may be given to valuable horses for two or three mornings in succession, followed by a cathartic.

ROOT-GRINDER IS EXCELLENT

Any Poultryman or Stock Raiser Can Make Practical Implement at Very Little Expense.

(By J. G. ALLHOUSE, in the Farm and Fireside.)

An easier and speedier method of reducing beets, carrots, turnips and other roots to pulp than chopping up with a spade or the four-toothed chopper sometimes used for this purpose is provided by the cheap home-made grinder illustrated. Any poultryman or stock-raiser can make it at trifling expense of time and work and use it with belt wheel for steam or gas-engine power, or it desired or complete, a crank and fly-wheel may be attached and the grinder operated by hand-power. Manner of making hopper, attaching legs, braces, etc., is well explained in large illustration; small illustration shows sectionally the interior or main working parts. A triangular-shaped strip of wood (A) extends across rear side of box, firmly nailed in place behind the spiked cylinder (B), which revolves and does the grinding, and another wooden strip (C), fitted with teeth like the cylinder, extends across front side, and slides in grooves or small strips at ends of hopper as an adjustable head. Teeth may be 12-penny spikes, heads cut off and the remainder driven into cylinder, leaving about a half-inch projecting, with ends filed sharp. The distance cylinder teeth are placed apart and position of movable concave teeth of which should intersect those of the cylinder, will determine the degree of fineness to which roots may be reduced. The grinder may be made of any desired capacity. If all its working parts are well made with screws and bolts, it will be very durable and may be run at high speed.

Excellent Root-Grinder.

LIVE STOCK NOTES

Lice will make the best hog poor. Hogs eat the food from which other animals will get no good.

It is a good idea to have stable windows helps to keep out flies.

Stock should not be allowed to drink surface or pond water.

A growing pig needs plenty of room, but for fattening small quarters are best.

Horses should be carefully worked, especially when the weather is hot and sultry.

The best time to cut the tails, as well as castrate, is when the lamb is a week old.

Extra feed increases the growth of a proper kind, and makes larger animals at maturity.

If a case of jump law develops in the herd this summer it should be attended to at once.

Skimp your sheep on good pasture and they will skimp you on mutton. Works both ways.

It often takes a number of generations to thoroughly change the disposition from timidity to quietude.

Middlings is a very good feed for swine, but it should not form the entire grain portion of their ration.

Sheep are comfort lovers, and the man who neglects to provide them with good, dry shelter makes a costly error.

Good sheep require good care to maintain their excellence. Poor sheep are always a burden upon the rest of the flock.

Some people claim that a hog is a scavenger by nature, but he certainly thrives better on clean feed and decent surroundings.

Indigestion is the cause of more than half the diseases of horses, and largely caused by improper food and working horses on a full stomach.

WHY TROYS CARRY MORE

than any other make of the same size

- 1—A TROY is bigger at the mouth than any other wagon. Look at the points marked "A". Then figure for yourself where the biggest strain comes. It's at the mouth of the skains.
- 2—A TROY 3 in. skain really measures 3¼ in. at the collar. See point marked "B". That makes the TROY a full size larger all the way through—axles, wheels, etc. Don't you want that added margin of safety?
- 3—The skains are oval, not round. See "A" again. Therefore they take in the full strength of the axles—just where the strength is needed most.
- 4—TROY axles are strictly clear, first-quality hickory. No other timber has the same carrying strength or resiliency. This is just an axle and skain talk. These things count—but they aren't all. We want you to know the TROY all over—from tongue to tail-board. Come in and let us show you why the TROY is the one best from every angle. You will like the price too—it's right.

BRYAN'S BOMB

Which Created the First Stampede at Baltimore Convention

Baltimore.—In presenting the name of John W. Kern to the Democratic Convention for temporary chairman William Jennings Bryan said:

"In thus dissenting from the judgment of our National Committee, as expressed in the recommendations, I recognize that the burden of proof is on me to overthrow the assumption that the committee can say that it represents the wishes of the convention and of the party and of the nation.

"I call attention to the fact that the rules provided and recommended to this convention are not final."

Cries of "No!" followed. "I remind you of this fact, that this convention has the right to accept or reject its conclusions, proof that the presumption of the convention is higher than the presumption of the National Committee."

"If any of you ask for my credentials, if any of you inquire why I am a mere delegate to this convention from one of the States and ask you to accept this name in face of the name they presented, I beg to tell you if it need be told that in three conventions I have been the champion of the Democratic party's principles and that I have received the votes of six million Democrats. If that is not proof of a party's confidence, I shall not attempt to furnish proof.

"I would not be worthy of the confidence of the Democrats of this nation if I was not willing to risk humiliation in their defense.

"I recognize that a man cannot be a leader in public affairs without making enemies and since the day I was first nominated at Chicago they have fought me at every turn."

"The fact that I have lived in proof that I have not deserted the people. If I had they would not remember now."

"I take for my text that which the committee has placed upon the walls: 'He never sold the truth to serve the hour.' That is the language of the hero of Monticello."

The delegates smiled at the reference to "Monticello" for the quotations is not from Jefferson, but from Jackson.

"I am still worthy of your support."

"We are told by those who support the committee's recommendation that it is disturbing harmony to oppose their suggestion."

"Let me free myself from any such charge that be made now or hereafter."

"Let me free myself from any criticism that anyone may have made before or may attempt hereafter. Is there any delegate here who tried earlier than I to secure harmony in this convention? I asked him to do so without presumption at the end of sixteen years of battle when I find the things I have fought for triumphant not only in my own party, but in the Republican party, the modest honor of standing before this convention and voicing my rejoicing."

"I was more interested in harmony than in any chance to speak to this convention. Not only that; I advised the committee to consult the two leading candidates who between them have more than two-thirds of the delegates in this convention."

"I asked the committee to consult these men and get their advice. Before the sub-committee there might be no confusion."

"Before the sub-committee the friends of Mr. Clark and Mr. Wilson were unable to agree. One supported Mr. James and the other Mr. Henry."

"What in the full committee the friends of Mr. Wilson joined the friends of Mr. Clark and supported Mr. James and yet the committee turned down the joint request."

and supported Mr. James and yet the committee turned down the joint request.

"I submit to you that the plan I present, the plan that I followed, was the plan for the securing of harmony, and the plan the committee followed was not the plan designed to assure harmony."

"Now let me for a moment present the qualifications of one fitted for this position. This is to ordinary occasion."

"This is an epoch-making convention. We have made such a struggle as was never seen in politics before. I have been in the center of the fight, and I know something of the courage it has brought forth and the sacrifices it has required."

"I know of men working upon the railroad for small wages, with what little they have laid up for future years, who have defied the railroad managers, and who fight with us at the risk of their all."

"I have seen lawyers risking their fortunes alienating men of large business in order to be champions of the poor."

"I have known men engaged in business, and carrying loans in banks, who have been threatened with their citizenship, walk up to the polls and vote on the side of the common people against predatory wealth."

"I am sure that now, when the hour of victory arrives, the song of victory shall be sung by one whose heart has been in the fight."

Mr. Bryan then paid a glowing tribute to Mr. Kern. Mr. Bryan finally proceeded:

"We have a great many Democrats who are not in sympathy with the purposes of the party. I not only voted the ticket, but I also made speeches for the candidate when I was not at all satisfied with the candidate and the influences that nominated him and directed the campaign in 1904."

Again the speaker was interrupted with shouts for Parker. The chairman rapped for order.

"And I assume that no friend of Judge Parker will contend that he was satisfied in 1904 with either the candidate or the purposes of the party. I remind you that this is not a question where personal ambition or personal considerations are uppermost. We are making history today and the convention is to announce to the country when we take up the challenge of the future."

"I am making history today and the convention is to announce to the country when we take up the challenge of the future."

UNION, KENTUCKY.

While Mr. Bryan was speaking Thomas F. Ryan was sitting on the convention floor.

"You ask me why I know that speech would not be satisfactory when I have not read it," said Mr. Ryan.

"I tell you it is the man not the words that make the speech. Here a roar of groans and cheers again interrupted."

"We have been passing through a great educational age, and the Democratic movement has been sweeping all before it around the world," he continued on.

Here Mr. Ryan referred to recent events in Russia, Persia, Turkey and China, as proving the advance of the Democratic idea throughout the world.

"And," he said, "while the outside world has been marching double-quick toward greater freedom, our beloved nation has been keeping step and popular government has grown and grown."

"And the people now know financial influence that dominated in Chicago and made conclusive the face, and they know the same influences are at work here and more brazenly than they were at Chicago."

"We have been traveling in the wilderness. We now come in sight of the promised land. During all the many hours of darkness, progressive democracy has been the people's pillar of fire by night."

"I pray you, delegates now that the dawn of day has come, do not rob the people of the right to have our party as their pillar of light by day."

This brought Mr. Ryan's sympathizers to their feet, and Mr. Ryan let it stand as his concluding words.

THE PRODIGAL JUDGE

CHAPTER XV.

At the Church Door.
Tom found Betty at supper.
"You were over to see Norton, weren't you, Bet? How did you find him?"
"The doctor says he will soon be about again."
"Betty, I wish you wouldn't go there again—that's a good girl!" he said tactfully, and as he conceived it, affectionately. Betty glanced up quickly.
"Why, Tom, why shouldn't I go there?"
"It might set people gossiping. I reckon there's been pretty near enough talk about you and Charley Norton." The planter's tone was conciliatory in the extreme, he dared not risk a break by any open show of authority.
"You needn't distress yourself, Tom. I don't know that I shall go there again," said Betty indifferently.

At Thicket Point Charley Norton, greatly excited, hobbled into the library in search of Carrington. He found him reading by the open window.
"Look here, Bruce!" he cried, "it's settled; she's going to marry me! Can't you wish me joy?"
Carrington held out his hand.
"You are not going to take any risks now, you have too much to live for," he said haltingly.
"No, I'm to keep away from Belle Plain," said Norton happily. "She insists on that. Everything is to be kept a secret until we are actually married; it's her wish."
"It's to be soon, then?" Carrington asked, still haltingly.
"Very soon."
There was a brief silence. Carrington, with face averted, looked from the window.
"I am going to stay here as long as you need me," he presently said.
"Miss Malroy asked me to, and then I am going back to the river, where I belong."

Betty ate supper with big Steve standing behind her chair and little Steve balancing himself first on one foot and then on the other near the door.
The long French windows, their curtains drawn, stood open. She wandered down to the terrace. There was the sound of a step on the path. Betty turned. It was Carrington who stood before her, his face haggard. Without a word he stepped to her side and took her hands rather roughly.

"What am I to do without you?" his voice was almost a whisper.
"What is this thing you have done?" Betty's heart was beating with dull sickening throbs.
"If you had only come!" she moaned. "Now I am going to be married tomorrow. I am to meet him at the Spring Bank church at ten o'clock."
"How can I give you up?" he said, his voice hoarse with emotion. He put her from him almost roughly, and leaning against the trunk of a tree buried his face in his hands. Betty watched him for a moment in wretched silence.
"It's good-by," he muttered.
She went to him, and, as he bent above her, slipped her arms about his neck.
"Kiss me," she breathed.
He kissed her hair, her soft cheek, then their lips met.

Another hot September sun was beating upon the earth as Betty galloped down the lane and swung her horse's head in the direction of Raleigh. She would keep her promise to Charley and she should never know what his happiness had cost her.
Norton joined her before she had covered a third of the distance that separated the two plantations.
"We are to go to the church. Mr. Bowen will be there; I arranged with him last night; he will drive over with his wife and daughter, who will be our witnesses, dear."

Afterward Betty could remember standing before the church in the fierce morning light; she heard Mr. Bowen's voice, she heard Charley's voice, she heard another voice—her own, though she scarcely recognized it.
"I'll be the horses, Betty," said Norton.
He had reached the edge of the oaks when from the silent depths of the denser woods came the sharp re-

Three Hard to Beat.
It is said that three of the strongest men in the state were in town yesterday. One of them would not drink as much water as he wanted unless it is from another man's well. The second forbids any of his family writing anything but a small "hand" as it is a waste of ink to make large letters. The third is a doctor who watches at night in order to save wear and tear on the machinery. All of them decline to take their county paper on the grounds that it is a terrible waste of space even in the most important.

"Charley—Charley!" She moaned. part of a rifle. The shock of the bullet sent the young fellow staggering back among the mossy and myrtle-covered graves.
For a moment no one grasped what had happened, only there was Norton who seemed to grope strangely among the graves. He had fallen now. Even as the shadows deepened he was aware that Betty was coming swiftly toward him.
"I'm shot—" he said, speaking with difficulty.
"Charley—Charley—" she moaned, slipping her arms about him and gathering him to her breast.
He looked up into her face.
"It's all over—" he said, but as much in wonder as in fear. "But I knew you could come to me—dear—" he added in a whisper.
She felt a shudder pass through him. He did not speak again.

CHAPTER XVI.

The Judge Offers a Reward.
The news of Charley Norton's murder spread quickly over the county. For two or three days bands of armed men scoured the woods and roads, and then this activity quite unproductive of any tangible results ceased. They were allowed to rest with the constituted authorities, namely Mr. Betts, the sheriff, and his deputies.
No private citizen had shown greater zeal than Judge Stoum Price. One morning he found under his door a folded paper:

"You talk too much. Shut up, or you'll go where Norton went."
A few moments later he burst in on Mr. Saul.
"Glance at that, my friend!" he cried, as he tossed the paper on the clerk's desk. "What do you make of it, sir?"
"Well, I'd keep still."
The judge laughed derisively as he bowed himself out.
He had scarcely done so when Mr. Betts knocked at the door. The sheriff came direct from Mr. Saul and arrived out of breath, but the letter was not mentioned by the judge. He spoke of the crops, the chance of rain, and the intricacies of county politics. The sheriff withdrew mystified, wondering why it was he had felt at liberty to broach the subject which was uppermost in his mind.

His place was taken by Mr. Peglos and on the heels of the tavern-keeper came Mr. Bowen. Judge Price received them with condescension, but back of the condescension was an air of reserve that did not invite questions. The judge discussed the extension of the national roads with Mr. Peglos, and the religion of the Persian fire-worshippers with Mr. Bowen; he permitted every pause and then retired as the sheriff had done without sight of the letter.

The judge's office became a perfect Mecca for the idle and the curious, and while he overflowed with high-bred courtesy he had never seemed so unapproachable—never so remote from matters of local and contemporary interest.

"Why don't you show 'em the letter?" demanded Mr. Mahaffy, when they were alone. "Can't you see they are suffering for a sight of it?"
"All in good time, Solomon." He became thoughtful. "Solomon, I am thinking of offering a reward for any information that will lead to the discovery of my anonymous correspondent," he at length observed with a finely casual air, as if the idea had just occurred to him, and had not been seething in his brain all day.

"There you go, Price," began Mahaffy.
"Solomon, this is no time for me to hang back. I shall offer a reward of five thousand dollars for this information." The judge's tone was resolute.
"Yes, sir, I shall make the figure conspicuous with the poignant grief I feel. He was my friend and client."

The next morning it was discovered that some time during the night the judge had tacked his anonymous communication on the court house door; just below it was another sheet of paper covered with bold script:
"To Whom It May Concern,"
"Judge Stoum Price," the above was intended for him since he found it under his office door on the morning of the twenty-fifth inst.
"Judge Price begs leave to state it as his unqualified conviction that the writer is a coward and a cur, and offers a reward of five thousand dollars for any information that will lead to his identification."

Tom Ware was seated alone over his breakfast. He had left his bed as the pale morning light crept across the great fields that were alike his pride and his despair—what was the use of trying to sleep when sleep was an impossibility? He was about to quit the table when big Steve entered the room to say there was a white fellow at the door.

"Fetch him along in here," said Ware.

The white fellow delivered a penciled note from Murrell. When he was gone, the planter ordered his horse.
As Ware rode away from Belle Plain he cursed Murrell under his breath. His own inclination toward evil was never robust; he could have connived over a long period of years to despoil Betty of her property, but murder and abduction was quite another thing.

Three miles from Belle Plain he entered a bridle path that led toward the river. A growth of small timber was standing along the water's edge, but as he drew nearer, those betterments which the resident of that lonely spot had seen fit to make for his own convenience, came under his scrutiny; these consisted of a log cabin and several lesser sheds.
Landing, he advanced toward the cabin. As he did so he saw two women at work heaving flax under an open shed. They were the wife and daughter of George Hicks, his overseer's brother.
"Morning, Mrs. Hicks," he said, addressing himself to the mother, a hulking ruffian of a woman. "Anybody with the captain?"
"Colonel Pentress is."

"Humph!" muttered Ware. He moved to the door of the cabin and entered the room where Murrell and Pentress were seated facing each other across the breakfast table.
"Well, what the devil do you want of me, anyhow?" demanded the planter.

"How's your sister, Tom?" inquired Murrell.
"I reckon she's the way you'd expect her to be." Ware dropped his voice to a whisper.
"John, you'll ruin yourself with your damned crazy infatuation!" it was Pentress who spoke.

"No, I won't, colonel, but I'm not going to discuss that. All I want is for Tom to go to Memphis and stay there for a couple of days. When he comes back Belle Plain and its niggers will be as good as his. I am going to take the girl away from there tonight. How soon can you get away from here, Tom?" he asked abruptly.
"By God, I can't go too soon!" cried the planter, staggering to his feet. He gave Pentress a hopeless beaten look.
"You're my witness that first and last I've no part in this!"
The colonel shrugged his shoulders. Murrell reached out a hand and rested on Ware's arm.
"Keep your wife, Tom, and within a week people will have forgotten all about Norton and your sister. I am going to give them something else to worry over."

Ware went from the cabin.
"Look here, how about the boy—are you ready for him if I can get my hands on him? I'll send him either up or down the river and place him in safe keeping where you can get him at any time you want."
"This must be done without violence, John!" stipulated Pentress.
"Certainly, I understand. Which shall it be—up or down river?"
"Could you take care of him for me below, at Natchez?" inquired Pentress.
"As well there as anywhere."
"Good!" said Pentress, and took his leave.

Three-quarters of an hour slipped by, then, piercing the silence, Murrell heard a shrill whistle; it was twice repeated—he saw Bess go down to the landing again. A half-hour elapsed and a man issued from the scattering growth of bushes that screened the shore. The new-comer crossed the clearing and entered the cabin. He was a young fellow of twenty-four or five, whose bronzed features wore a reckless expression.
"Well, captain, what's doing?" he asked.

"If anything's to be done, now is the time, Hues. What have you to report?"
"Well, I've seen the council of each clan division. They are ripe to start this thing off."
Murrell gave him a moment of moody regard.
"Twice already I've named the day and hour, but now I'm going to put it through!" He set his teeth and thrust out his jaw.

"Captain, you're the greatest fellow in America!—inside of a week men who have never been within five hundred miles of you will be asking of each other who John Murrell is!"
Murrell had expected to part with Hues then and there and for all time, but Hues possessed qualities which might still be of use.
"Hues, you must start back across Tennessee. Make it Sunday at midnight—that's three days off." Unconsciously his voice sank to a whisper.
"Sunday at midnight," repeated Hues slowly.

"When you have passed the word into middle Tennessee, turn south and make the best of your way to New Orleans. Don't stop for anything—push through as fast as you can. You'll find me there. I've a notion you and I will quit the country together."
"Quit the country? Why, captain, who's talking of quitting the country?"

"You speak as though you were fool enough to think the niggers would accomplish something!" said Murrell coolly. "There will be confusion at first, but there are enough white men in the southwest to handle a heap better organized insurrection than we'll be able to set going. Our fellows will have to use their heads as well as their hands or they are likely to help the nigger swallow his medicine. I look for nothing else than considerable of a shake-up along the Mississippi—what with lynchers and regulators a man will have to show a clean bill of health to be allowed to live, so matter what his color—just being white won't help him any!"
"No, you're right, it won't!" and again Hues gave way to easy laughter.

DAIRY

BUTTERMILK CHEESE IS NEW

Great Amount of Waste at Creameries Would Furnish Large Supply of Palatable Food.

(By J. L. SAMMIS.)
Buttermilk cheese is a new product obtained by curdling buttermilk with heat, draining the curd and adding salt. Large amounts of buttermilk are wasted every year at creameries. If this were made into buttermilk cheese it would furnish a large supply of palatable food, equal in value, pound for pound, to lean beefsteak. It can be sold profitably at half the price of meat.

Easily Made Drain Rack.

To make buttermilk cheese, the buttermilk is curdled by heating to 80 degrees, and left undisturbed for an hour. It is then heated to 130 degrees and, after standing quiet for about an hour, the clear whey is drawn off the curd, and the latter is placed on a draining rack, which is covered with cheesecloth. Here it remains half a day or over night, until as dry as desired, when it is salted with one and one-half pounds of salt per hundred pounds of curd, and is ready for use. Buttermilk cheese can be made from buttermilk, from cream which was pasteurized before ripening, or the buttermilk may be pasteurized during the process of cheesemaking. In either case insuring the absence of disease germs.

Where only a few pounds of buttermilk cheese are made at a time, as on a farm or for home use, the buttermilk can be heated in a pail or in a clean new wash boiler on the stove. After the second heating, i. e., to 130 degrees, if the curd has settled, the whey can be mostly poured off by tipping the pail and the curd poured into a small cheesecloth bag to drain. If the curd is soaking, it can be dipped off the surface of the whey with a dipper or large spoon and put in the bag to drain. A small wooden draining rack a foot square and five or six inches deep, with the bottom made of one-fourth of an inch mesh galvanized or tinned iron wire netting and covered with cheesecloth, is useful for draining small amounts of buttermilk cheese.

WHERE AYRSHIRE DOES WELL

Scottish Breed Thrives Exceptionally Well on Rough Pastures of Inferior Character.

Under conditions where the land is rough and stony and pasture rather poor, no breed will give as good returns as the Ayrshire. In her native home, Scotland, she inherited a sturdy constitution and an independence which enables her to hunt for a living, but she likewise responds well to good treatment.

The Ayrshire gives a medium flow of milk of average richness, especially adapted for cheese-making on account of its small fat globules, which retard the creaming process—a fact which has designated her as the cheese-making cow.

She is medium in size, weighing about 1,000 pounds, red and white, or brown and white, the white predominating. She is a stylish, alert cow, the backward sweep of the horns giving her a distinguished appearance.

Keep Calves Well Bodded.
The stomach of the little calf is very sensitive and easily ruined. Nothing will do it quicker than keeping the animal confined in a wet, dirty pen. Clean the calf pen often and bed it with a liberal supply of dry straw or straw.

It is no little labor to keep a stall where several calves run clean and dry, but there is no other way if you want to raise good calves. Eternal vigilance is the price of everything good in the stock line.

Slugs for Cows.
A yield of 12 tons of slugs may easily be obtained from one acre of corn. Allowing 80 pounds of slugs as a daily ration, one acre of corn will furnish four cows with slugs for 300 days.

RAISING HIGH-GRADE CALVES

Feed Little Animals Whole Milk for First Three Weeks—Do Not Forget Supply of Salt.

To teach a calf to drink, let it get quite hungry first, then let two fingers into its mouth and lower its head into the pail. Calf feeders can be bought and are liked by some. It will help matters at first to raise the bucket or pan to the calf, if possible. Never feed in wooden pails, says the Farm Dairyman. They soon sour. Always wash and scald the pails at least once a day. It takes less time than to bother with sick calves.

As a rule it is best to feed the calves whole milk for the first three weeks; hardy, strong calves would stand the change to whole milk at two weeks. At first give it from six to eight pounds (two and one-half to three and one-half quarts), according to the size of the calf, twice daily. At the end of three weeks it should get from eight to ten pounds. The calf should always get the colostrum (first milk), which is very laxative and intended by nature to cleanse the bowels of the calf.

A calf at three months old should not get over eight quarts of milk per day; at four months it cannot make use of more than ten quarts. With this it should have two quarts of mixed crushed grain per day, and all the hay it can eat. At six months old the milk allowance may be dropped out, or before that time if the milk is scarce. Weaning the calf from milk should be slowly done by substituting water gradually. Calves should have fresh, clean water to drink from babyhood to maturity. Do not forget the supply of salt for the calves. Occasionally put a lump of fresh sod in the pen. The calves seem to enjoy a taste of earth. When making the change from whole milk, one table-spoonful of oilcake may be added to the milk. If flaxseed is used, and there is nothing better, it should be well boiled and from a half cupful to a cupful of the jelly added to the warm milk.

To make the milk into a whole flaxseed to four quarts of water, add a little salt; soak over night and boil for one hour next morning.

Allowing Tomato to Run.
It is best to allow late tomato vines to lie on the ground and spread at will, claims one raiser. Each plant thus allowed freedom to vine will cover many square feet of soil, but it will bear more fruit of better flavor than tomato vines trained to stakes. The branches of the vines on the ground take root at many points for supplying greater amount of nourishment. The greater amount of foliage a tomato plant bears, the more fruit it is able to produce. Tomatoes ripening the shade of foliage are of as good color and flavor as those ripening in the sun.

Use of Spreader Best.
The piling of manure in small lots as it is hauled off will have some points in its favor, but from the standpoint of retaining the largest possible good from the fertilizing elements contained in it is plainly a poorer method than scattering from the spreader.

Handled in this way, the soluble portion of the fertilizers that the manure contains goes at once into the soil, while if the manure is put in piles there is a loss by chemical changes and the escape of gases.

DAIRY NOTES

The dairy cow is the farmer's best insurance against hard times. The cow that is offered for sale is seldom the cow you want to buy. Feed some ground corn, but do not make it the sole concentrated ration. Oats, wheat, bran, oil meal and shorts should supplement the clover hay.

Warm skim milk for feeding purposes soon pays the cost of a farm separator.

Good pasture for the calves means a saving of milk, finer calves, and greater dairy profits.

The best dairyman is not because he has to be but because it is second nature for him to be. Farm fertilizers are valuable and important, but the dairy cow should not be kept for fertilizer alone.

Where a farmer is starting on a new farm where there are only a few acres broken nothing pays better than cows and hogs.

By intelligent breeding and care the majority of the dairy herds could be made to double their present productive capacity.

Too often the dairy, poultry and hog work are side lines on the farm. Make them the main line and they will lead you to profit.

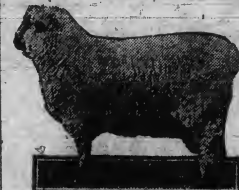

MANAGEMENT OF EWE FLOCK

On Thrifty Condition of Animals Depends Success of Breeder—Must Have Some Attention.

By all means keep your ewes healthy and vigorous, for upon a healthy, thrifty condition of ewes depends your success.

The healthy ewe is able to live on rougher forage than your other farm work, but it is with sheep as with all else. You must give them some attention if you expect profit.

Men, who every season make money from their lambs, find that if they feed them better for several weeks and flush the ewe stock each fall, that is, before going to the buck, there are more twins and more milk at lambing time. Many of the troubles with weak lambs and empty udders would be avoided if your ewes were fatter when brought in for the winter.

Try the plan of flushing your ewes, then follow with good pasture and you will see from results that the plan makes most profits. Have a dry, well-sheltered roomy yard, with deep shed for the ewes. If you have neighbors with dogs, have a tight, stout woven wire fence with board at top and bottom around the sheep fold. Keep the sheep in this yard at night—this will save your sheep, as well as your temper.

HANDY DOOR FOR HOG HOUSE

Practical Arrangement of Passage Way to Keep Larger Animals In and Little Fellows Out.

A simple method of arranging a door for the hog house is given in the Practical Farmer. The illustration gives a good idea of its construction. The door, putting raw sides toward the door. In the 2x4s bore a few holes, inch or larger. In these put an iron rod, or a fork handle to hold, up so pigs can walk under and hogs cannot. The rod will hold up door and prevent sow from lifting door. Nail boards on each side of 2x4s to slide door in.

SHOULD NOT NEGLECT COLT

If Youngster Is Properly Handled From Beginning It Will Not Give Much Trouble.

The farmer owning 40 acres or more of land, who does not raise at least one colt every year, is not doing his best. The mare will do most kinds of farm work and raise her colt without much loss of time. If the colt is properly handled from the beginning it will not give much trouble. Never allow it to run after its mother when she is working.

This worries and frets the mare, and it wears out the colt. Keep it at the barn, loose in a box stall, and tempt it with a little clover hay and oats. Early colts will be weaned pretty soon now. If they have been brought up to this point right, weaning does not mean much. Feed more frequently with sweet clover hay, oats and corn, and the colt will soon be able to take care of itself. Keep it in the barn at night and allow it to run with other young stock in the pasture during the day.

Feeding Hogs.
It is best never to feed hogs on the ground. It is no more natural for a hog to pick his feed up out of the dirt and mud than for any other animal to do so, although circumstances have in many cases forced him to do so. Have floors on which to feed hogs, and not only will you save feed by using them, but they will appreciate their ration much more.

Susceptibility to Disease.
Sheep, while generally hardy and robust, are extremely susceptible to attacks of disease, which, although not always fatal, wear on the constitution and ultimately impair the usefulness of animals subjected.

Three-Card to Beat.

It is said that three of the ugliest men in the state were in town yesterday. One of them will not drink as much water as the other two. It is from another man's well. The second forbids any of his family writing anything but a small "hand" as he is weak of ink to make large letters. The third is a watch at night in order to see wear and tear on the machinery. All of them decline to leave their county paper on the ground that it is terrible to read their spectacles to the newspaper, even in the morning.

The postoffice which is in the same building was not entered though there was money, stamps and a gold watch in this office. Edwards & Son carried a burglary insurance so their loss will be fully covered.

There is no clue to the thieves though it is believed the crime was committed by tramps.

MISS ALICE CARVER

Wins The First Prize In The Recorder's Popularity Contest

And Will Receive The Handsome Set of Furniture As A Gold Watch.

Miss Lena Tanner, of Florence, Wins Second Prize, A Ladies' Gold Watch.

The Recorder's popularity contest closed yesterday at 1 p. m. For the last three days the friends of the two leading contestants in Division No. 1 have been decidedly active and did much quiet and effective work as shown by the very large vote each of the leading two young ladies received during that time. Some sections of the county were canvassed closely and voted liberally to the requests of those soliciting votes, while from other neighborhoods the vote has been light. Taken altogether the contest has panned out about the financial success the Recorder anticipated.

Miss Alice Carver maintained her lead and brot the handsome majority of 88,667.

In Division No. 2 the contest has been very quiet as between the local contestants until last week when the friends of Miss Lena Tanner, of Florence, got busy and hustled in quite a good vote in the last few days, and came out winner by a very good vote for the short time her friends worked for her, her majority being 28,350.

The large vote received by each of the leading contestants in division No. 2 is a deserved compliment, and the Recorder only regrets each did not win the bedroom set and the watch. Each of the young ladies is very grateful to their friends for the votes they cast for them.

The Recorder desires to express its gratitude to Miss Lizzie Rogers and James A. Duncan for the service they rendered it as counters during the contest.

The Recorder desires to thank Mrs. Maude Fowler for her assistance with her adding machine in the last two counts.

On July 4th, the Aurora team having disbanded and sent the Bellevue boys word that they couldn't be here for the two games the 4th of July, E. J. Ryle told the boys that they would line up a team that would interest them. They were disappointed, but told him to go ahead and get a team, they would meet them rather than disappoint the crowd that they knew would be on hand. So the following players were engaged to play the locals: Eliza Scott, C. John Snell, first base; Pat Sandford 2d base; Ray Conner, short stop; John Lambert 3b; W. Rogers right field; Elmer Rice center field; Henry Deck left field. This left the locals opponents without a pitcher but manager Ryle telephoned Hubert Brady, the "old head" to pitch the game and the lineup was complete. The locals put Bobby Brady, the star of the Bellevue team in the box and W. Clara, a nice little catcher, at the receiving end, but the head of the team won the day over his son and the score resulted 10 to 6 in favor of Ryles team. There is not a business than Robert Brady but when you put him in the box against "Old Pat," the old head triumphed as usual. Brady is a wonder, perhaps the most remarkable in the business, as he is close to 50 as the score of time is marked and he is still there with the goods and can deliver them in any style.

THE PRODIGAL JUDGE

"When you've done your work you strike south as I tell you and join me. I'm going to keep New Orleans for myself—it's my ambition to destroy the city Old Hickory saved!"

"And then it's change your name and strike out for Texas with what you've picked up!"

"No, isn't it? I'll have my choice of men—a river full of ships. Look here, there's South America, or some of those islands in the gulf with black-and-tan populations and a few white mongrels holding on to civilization by their eye-teeth; what's to hinder our setting up shop for ourselves? Two or three hundred Americans could walk off with an island like Haiti, for instance—and it's black with niggers. What we'd done here would be just so much capital down there. We'd make it a stamping-ground for the Klan! In the next two years we could bring in a couple of thousand Americans and then we'd be ready to take over their government, whether they liked it or not—and run it at a profit. We'd put the niggers back in slavery where they belong, and set them at work raising sugar and tobacco for their own bosses. Man, it's the richest land in the world, I tell you—and the mountains are full of gold!"

Hues had kindled with a ready enthusiasm while Murrell was speaking. "That sounds right, captain—we've got a country and a flag of our own—and I look at those free niggers as just so much boot!"

"I shall take only picked men with me—I can't give ship room to any other—but I want you. You'll join me in New Orleans?" said Murrell.

"When do you start south?" asked Hues quickly.

"Inside of two days. I've got some private business to settle before I leave. I'll hang round here until that's attended to."

CHAPTER XVII.

The Judge Extends His Credit.

That afternoon Judge Price walked out to Belle Plain. Solomon Mahaffy had known that this was a civility. Betty Mahaffy could by no means escape. He had been conscious of the judge's purpose from the moment it existed in the germ state, and he had striven to divert him, but his striving had been in vain, for though the judge valued Mr. Mahaffy and his certain sterling qualities which he professed to discern beneath the hard crust that made up the external man, he was not disposed to accept him as his mentor in nice matters of taste and gentlemanly feeling. He owed it to himself personally to tender his sympathy. Miss Mahaffy must have heard something of the honorable part he had played; surely she could not be in ignorance of the fact that the lawless element, dreading his further activities, had threatened him. She must know, too, about that reward of five thousand dollars. Certainly her grief could not blind her to the fact that he had met the situation with a largeness of public spirit that was an impressive lesson to the entire community.

These were all points over which he and Mahaffy had wrangled, and he felt that his friend, in seeking to keep him away from Belle Plain, was standing squarely in his light. He really could not understand Solomon or his objections. He pointed out that Norton had probably left a will. "No one knew yet—probably his estate would go to his intended wife—what more likely? He understood Norton had cousins somewhere in middle Tennessee—there was the attractive possibility of extended litigation. Miss Mahaffy needed a strong, clear brain to guide her past those difficulties his agile friends assembled in her path. He beamed on his friend with a wide sunny smile.

"You mean she needs a lawyer, Price?" inquired Mahaffy.

"That slap at me, Solomon, is unworthy of you. Just name some one, will you, who has shown an interest comparable to mine? I may say I have devoted my entire energy to her affairs, and with disinterestedness. I have made myself felt. Will you mention who else these cutthroats have tried to browbeat and frighten? They know that my theories and conclusions are a menace to them! I got in a panic, at present, some fellow will lose his nerve and light out for the tall timber—and it will be just Judge Slocum Price who's done the trick—no one else!"

"Are you looking for some one to take a pot shot at you?" inquired Mahaffy, sourly.

"Your remark uncovers my fondest hope, Solomon—I'd give five years of my life just to be shot at—that would round out the episode of the letter nicely"; again the judge beamed on Mahaffy with that wide and sunny smile of his.

"Why don't you let the boy go alone, Price?" suggested Mahaffy. He lacked that sense of sublime confidence in the judge's tact and discretion of which the judge, himself, entertained never a doubt.

"I shall not obtrude myself, Solomon; I shall merely walk out to Belle Plain and leave a civil message. Now what's due Miss Mahaffy in her capacity—she has sustained no ordinary loss, and in no ordinary fashion. She has been the center of a striking and profoundly moving (tragedy!)—I would give a good deal to know if my late client left a will—"You might ask her," said Mahaffy cynically. "Nothing like going to headquarters for the news!"

"Solomon, Solomon, give me credit for common sense—go further, and give me credit for common decency! Don't let us forget that ever since we came here she has manifested a charmingly hospitable spirit where we are concerned!"

"Wouldn't charity hit nearer the mark, Price?"

"I have never so regarded it, Solomon," said the judge mildly. "I have read a different meaning in the beef and flour and potatoes she's sent here. I expect if the truth could be known to us she is wondering in the midst of her grief why I haven't called, but she'll appreciate the considerate delicacy of a sentence. I wish it were possible to get cut flowers in this cursed wilderness!"

The judge had been occupied with a simple but ingenious toilet. He had trimmed the frayed skirts of his coat; then, by turning his cuffs inside out and updating them a fresh surface made its first public appearance. Next his shoes had engaged his attention. They might have well discouraged a less resolute and resourceful character, but with the contents of his ink-well he artfully colored his white yarn socks where they showed through the rifts in the leather. This the judge did gaily, now humming a snatch of song, now listening civilly to Mahaffy, now replying with undisturbed cheerfulness. Last of all he clapped his dingy beaver on his head, giving it an updating in a jaunty slant, and stepped to the door.

"Well, wish me luck, Solomon, I'm off—come, Hannibal!" he said.

At heart he cherished small hope of seeing Betty, advantageous as he felt an interview might prove. However, on reaching Belle Plain, he and Hannibal set the wheels of the cool parlor by little Steve. It was more years than the judge cared to remember since he had put his foot inside such a house, but with true grandeur of soul he rose to the occasion; a sublimated dignity shone from every featured feature, while he fixed little Steve with so fierce a glance that the grin froze on his lips.

"You are to say that Judge Slocum Price presents his compliments and condolences to Miss Mahaffy—have you got that straight, you pinch of snoot?" he concluded affably. Little Steve, assessed alike by the judge's air of confidence and his easy flow of words, signified that he had. "You may also say that Judge Price's ward, young Master Hazard, presents his compliments and condolences—" What more the judge might have said was interrupted by the entrance of Betty, herself.

"My dear young lady—" the judge bowed, then he advanced toward her with the solemnity of carriage and countenance he deemed suitable to the occasion, and her extended hand was engulfed between his two pump palms. He rolled his eyes heavenward in a look of devotion, and his eyes as his own inscrutable wisdom dictated, he murmured with pious resignation. "We are all poorer, ma'am, that he has died—just as we were richer while he lived!" The rich cadence of the judge's speech fell sonorously on the silence, and that look of devotion which had never quite left Betty's eyes since they saw Charley Norton fall, rose out of their clear depths again. The judge, instantly stricken with a sense of the inadequacy of his words, doubled on his spiritual tracks. "In a round about way, ma'am, we're bound to believe in the omnipotence of Providence—we must think it—though a body might be disposed to hold that west Tennessee had got out of the line of divine supervision recently. Let me lead you to a chair, ma'am!" Hannibal had slipped to Betty's side and held her hand in hers. The judge regarded the pair with great benevolence of expression.

"He would come, and I hadn't the heart to forbid it. If I can be of any service to you, ma'am either in the capacity of a friend—or professionally—I trust you will not hesitate to command me—" The judge backed toward the door.

"Since You Insist, Ma'am—My Best Regards."

"Did you walk out, Judge Price?" asked Betty kindly.

"Nothing more than a heartfelt exclamation, ma'am; the pleasure of seeing you is something we had not reckoned on!" The judge's speech was thick and uncouth with good feeling. He wished that Mahaffy might have been there to note the reserve and dignity of his deportment.

"But you must—" "You might ask her," said Betty. At least this questionable old man was good to Hannibal.

"I couldn't think of it, ma'am—" "You'll have a glass of wine, then," urged Betty hospitably. For the moment she had lost sight of what was clearly the judge's besetting sin.

The judge paused abruptly. He endured a moment of agonizing irresolution.

"On the advice of my physician I dare not touch wine, stout, ma'am, and liver—but this restriction does not apply to corn whisky—in moderation, and as a tonic—either before meals, immediately after meals or at any time between meals—always keeping in mind the idea of its tonic properties—" The judge seemed to mellow and ripen. This was much better than having the dogs sicked on you! His manner toward Betty became almost fatherly. Poor young thing, so lonely and desolate in the midst of all this splendor—he surreptitiously wiped away a tear of sympathy. Little Steve presented himself and was told to bring whisky, audibly smacked his lips—a whole lot better, surely!

"I am sorry you think you must hurry away, Judge Price," said Betty. She retained the small brown hand Hannibal had thrust into hers. "The eastern mail gets in today, ma'am, and I have reason to think my share of it will be especially heavy, for it brings the bulk of my professional correspondence." In ten years the judge had received just one communication by mail—a bill which had followed him through four states and seven counties. "I expect my secretary—" boldly fixing Solomon Mahaffy's status, "is already dipping into it; an excellent assistant, ma'am, but literary rather than legal!"

Little Steve reappeared bearing a silver tray on which was a decanter and glass.

"Since you insist, ma'am," the judge poured himself a drink, "my best respects—" he bowed profoundly.

"If you are quite willing, Judge, I think I will keep Hannibal. Miss Bowen, who has been here—since—" her voice broke suddenly.

"I understand, ma'am," said the judge soothingly. He gave her a glance of great concern and turned to Hannibal. "Dear lad, you'll be very quiet and obedient, and do exactly as Miss Mahaffy says? When shall I come for him, ma'am?"

"I'll send him to you when he is ready to go home. I am thinking of visiting my friends in North Carolina, and I should like to have him spend as much time as possible with me before I start for the east."

It had occurred to Betty that she had done little or nothing for the child; probably this would be her last opportunity.

The state of the judge's feelings was such that with elaborate absence of mind he poured himself a second drink of whisky, and that there should be no doubt the act was one of inadvertence, said again, "My best respects, ma'am," and bowed as before. Putting down the glass, he backed toward the door.

"I trust you will not hesitate to call upon me if I can be of any use to you, ma'am—a message will bring me here without a moment's delay." He was rather disappointed that no allusion had been made to his recent activities. He reasoned correctly that Betty was as yet in ignorance of the somewhat dangerous eminence he had achieved as the champion of law and order. However, he reflected with satisfaction that Hannibal, in remaining, would admirably serve his ends.

Betty insisted that he should be driven home, and after faintly protesting, the judge gracefully yielded the point, and a few moments later rolled away from Belle Plain behind a pair of sleek-coated bays, with a negro in livery on the box. He was conscious of a great sense of exaltation. He felt that he should paralyze Mahaffy. He even temporarily forgot the blow his hopes had sustained when Betty spoke of returning to North Carolina. This was life—broad acres and niggers—principally to trot after you totting liquor—and such liquor!—he lolled back luxuriantly with half-closed eyes.

"Twenty years in the wood if an hour!" he muttered. "I'd like to have just such a taste in my mouth when I come to die and probably she has barrels of it!" he sighed deeply, and searched his soul for words with which adequately to describe that whisky to Mahaffy.

But why not do more than paralyze Solomon—that would be pleasant but not especially profitable. The judge came back quickly to the vexed problem of his future. He desired to make some striking display of Miss Mahaffy's courtesy. He knew that his credit was experiencing the pangs of an early mortality; he was not sensitive, yet for some days he had been sensible of the fact that what he called the commercial class was viewing him with open disfavor; but he must hang on in Raleigh a little longer—for him it had become the abode of hope. The judge considered the matter. At least he could let people see something of that decent respect with which Miss Mahaffy treated him. They were entering Raleigh now, and he ordered the coachman to pull his horses down to a walk. He had decided to make use of the Belle Plain turnout in creating an atmosphere of confidence and trust—especially the best part of an hour interviewing his creditors. It amounted almost to a mass-meeting of the adult male population, for he had no favorites. When he invaded virgin territory he believed in starting the largest possible number of accounts without delay. The advantage of his system, as he explained it, was to Mahaffy, was that it bred a noble spirit of emulation.

He let it be known in a general way that things were looking up with him; just in what quarter he did not specify, but there he was, seated in the Belle Plain carriage, and the inference was undeniable that Miss Mahaffy was to recognize his activities in a substantial manner.

Mahaffy, looking away the afternoon in the county clerk's office, heard of the judge's return. He heard that Charley Norton had left a will; that Thicket Point went to Miss Mahaffy; that the Norton cousins in middle Tennessee were going to put up a fight; that Judge Price had been retained as counsel by Miss Mahaffy; that he was authorized to begin an independent search for Charley Norton's murderer, and was to spare no expense; that Judge Price was about to pay his debts. Mahaffy grinned at this and hurried home. He could believe all but the last; that was the crowning touch of unreality.

The judge explained the situation. "I wouldn't withhold hope from any man, Solomon; it's the cheapest thing in the world and the one thing we are most miserably apt of extending to our fellows. These people all feel better—and what did it cost me?—just a little decent consideration; just the knowledge of what the unavoidable associations of ideas in their own minds would do for them!"

"Yes, Ma'am—Why, Miss Betty, They're Lovely Men!"

What had seemed the corpse of credit breathed again, and the judge and Mahaffy immediately embarked upon a characteristic celebration. Early candle-light found them making a beginning; midnight came—the gray and purple of dawn—and they were still at it, back of closed doors and shuttered windows.

Convention a Mighty Struggle Between Those Titans of Politics.

COMMONER ALWAYS TO FRONT

His Sensational Attack on Plutocrats and Tammany, and Stanchfield's Bitter Reply—How Champ Clark's Forces Failed to Prevent the Nomination of the Governor of New Jersey—Delegates Wearied and Exasperated by the Week-Long Contest.

FOR PRESIDENT.
WOODROW WILSON

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT.
THOMAS R. MARSHALL

By W. A. PATTERSON.
Convention Hall, Baltimore.—The blue individual without an admission ticket will tell you he would not go if he had a ticket. "All national conventions are alike."

It has been my privilege to attend a few national conventions, including the recent Republican gathering at Chicago, and the meeting of the Democrats at Baltimore, and I can assure you the convention held here, which nominated Woodrow Wilson for president, and Thomas R. Marshall for vice-president, was different.

Writers, like delegates, receive instructions, and writers, like delegates, may not safely disregard these instructions. I am going to try not to disregard mine, which were to the effect that I write, not a political news "story" filled with opinions for or against principles or factions or individuals, but a "human interest story," that side of the big meeting of Democrats which the "people at home" would have seen had they been permitted to attend, without regard to the faults or virtues of the contending sides, or the right or wrong of the different factions.

The Baltimore convention was one of those great gatherings which one may witness but once in a lifetime if at all; the kind of a political gathering whose like has never before been witnessed in this or any other country.

It was a battle of political Titans—two men—William Jennings Bryan, three times the standard-bearer of the party, and Charles F. Murphy, the recognized leader of Tammany, probably the most remarkable political organization this country has ever known.

No sooner had Cardinal Gibbons, clad in the rich robes of his churchly office, pronounced the final words of the opening invocation on Tuesday noon than the battle was on.

Mr. Bryan's nomination of Senator Kern for the temporary chairmanship in opposition to Judge Parker, the choice of the national committee, was but a feint. When Mr. Kern, taking the speaker's platform, pleaded for Democratic harmony, and proposed to Judge Parker that they both retire in favor of any one of half a dozen men whom he named, Mr. Bryan scored his first tally. He had the opposition on the defensive for a time at least.

When Judge Parker declined to respond to Senator Kern's proposition the senator retired and named Mr. Bryan for temporary chairman, a move that was widely welcomed by the New York delegation, as Mr. Murphy was more than willing to try conclusions with the Commoner on a direct issue.

The surprise of the day was the throwing of the Clark strength to Parker, and it was that incident, happening within an hour after Chairman Mack's gavel had called the convention to order, that produced the deadlock when the balloting for the nominee began early Friday morning. It resulted in the defeat of Mr. Bryan by a vote of 679 for Parker to 510 for Bryan.

The defeat of Colonel Bryan for the temporary chairmanship was a momentous event for the Democratic party, and the leaders and the rank and file of the party knew it when it occurred. It was no longer a contest between candidates. It was war to the bitter end between Mr. Bryan and Mr. Murphy. Both had accepted the game of battle, and there would be no compromise.

The change in the party alignment brought much surprise to the layman, among them the swinging of Theodore A. Bell of California, temporary chairman of the Denver convention of four years ago to the Murphy forces. Mr. Bell led the opposition to Bryan, and did not hesitate in demanding that the Nebraska, to whom the Democracy had given three opportunities, now step aside and permit other leaders to shape the course of the party.

After the vote ex-Governor Pattison of Ohio expressed the feelings of many of the old leaders who had that day voted against Bryan, when he said:

"The defeat of Mr. Bryan, necessary though it was, was an occasion for tears rather than cheers. He has been and is a great man, but he has had his opportunity, and must now step aside." That Tuesday night following the defeat of Mr. Bryan will ever remain a memorable one in Democratic history. The great question of that night was: "Is it to be a bolt?"

Among the leaders for the various candidates, the Clark forces instantly realized that if the speaker was to win he must do so in spite of Mr. Bryan's opposition. The Bryan leaders knew they would have Bryan's support, but would it suffice? Leaders of other candidates were wondering what form the alignment might take when the deadlock between Clark and Wilson should be broken.

Mr. Bryan was named as a member of the committee on resolutions, but refused the chairmanship of the committee. The reason for his refusal was explained on Thursday night, when, after the permanent organization had been completed and Ollie James of Kentucky had delivered his address as permanent chairman, Mr. Bryan stepped to the front of the speaker's platform and asked unanimous consent for the presentation of a resolution. But the convention was not willing to take Mr. Bryan on faith, and cries of "No! No!" "Read it! Read the resolution!" arose from all parts of the great hall.

Mr. Bryan, raising his voice so that it filled the hall, and could be heard despite the uproar, read:

"Resolved, That we hereby declare ourselves against the nomination of any candidate representing or under the domination of J. Pierpont Morgan, Thomas W. Ryan, August Belmont or any other member of the favored or privilege seeking class. Also that we ask any delegate representing such an interest be requested to withdraw."

It is impossible for words to express the uproar and turmoil of the moment. Cheers, groans, catcalls, hisses were mingled in one deafening road.

Mr. Bryan had again put the opposition on the defensive. "Mr. Chairman! Mr. Chairman!" came the demands for recognition from all portions of the hall, and Congressmen Brice of Virginia was recognized and invited to the speaker's stand.

When a semblance of order had been restored, and before Mr. Brice had had an opportunity to speak, Mr. Bryan announced that if New York and Virginia would take a poll of their delegations, and if a majority of the delegates of each state voted in favor of Belmont and Ryan, he would withdraw the last paragraph of his resolution.

"No! No!" came the cries from the delegations of the two states. Raising his voice so as to be heard above the uproar, Mr. Bryan stated that two delegates from Virginia had asked that such part of the last paragraph as applied to Virginia be withdrawn, and he would do so, and if one delegate from New York would make the same request for that state he would withdraw the last paragraph entirely.

Again came the cries of "No! No!" accompanied by groans and hisses. The convention at that moment was against Mr. Bryan and his resolution as originally read would have been voted down, had the opportunity been offered.

Brice succeeded in getting attention and in the end the Virginia delegation offered defiance to the Commoner, stating that no member of the convention had asked for the withdrawal of any part of the resolution; that Virginia was entirely competent to handle its internal affairs, and would recognize no right of Mr. Bryan to meddle with her.

New York's policy of silence, a policy which was maintained throughout the convention, remained unbroken throughout the turmoil, which lasted for an hour.

Before the vote which had been asked for on the suspension of the rules could be taken Mr. Bryan withdrew the last paragraph of his resolution, and the resolution was then passed practically unanimously. The dramatic incident, probably the most dramatic that has ever occurred in a national political convention, had but served to widen the breach between the Bryan and Murphy forces, if that were possible.

Woodrow Wilson.

Thomas R. Marshall.

From the first to the ninth ballot

New York voted "90 for Harmon," and Nebraska voted almost solidly for Clark, as instructed by the state convention. Mr. Bryan, as a Nebraska delegate-at-large, following the instructions up to and including the fourteenth ballot. On the tenth ballot New York switched to "90 for Clark," causing a Clark demonstration. The balloting continued without serious interruption until Nebraska was called on the fifteenth, when Mr. Bryan arose from his seat on the floor and asked permission to explain a change in his vote.

"No! No!" came the cries, and Congressman Sulzer of New York, who was presiding, ruled the Nebraska vote out of order, and instructed him to vote without an explanation.

"Despite my instructions, I will not vote for Clark so long as New York votes for him," yelled Mr. Bryan, and pandemonium was again loose in the great convention.

The unanimous consent which Mr. Bryan had asked was finally granted at the request of Senator Stone of Missouri.

From the platform Mr. Bryan read a typewritten statement, saying he did so for the reason that he did not want to be misquoted. It was a scathing arraignment of Murphy and the interests Bryan claims Murphy represents, and another effort to read Tammany out of the Democratic party. He referred to his resolution which the convention had passed on Thursday night, and said no candidate the party might nominate with the assistance of the New York delegation voting as a unit under the direction of Murphy would be in a position to carry out the promises of that resolution.

The reading of his statement was interrupted time after time before it was completed, and when completed a hundred or more delegates were on the floor clamoring for recognition.

"Will you support the nominee of this convention?" yelled one delegate. "I do not expect to bolt," parried Mr. Bryan.

Another succeeded in asking a long hypothetical question, which Bryan

DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM SUMMARIZED

Following is a summary of the more important planks in the platform adopted by the Democratic national convention:

Washington, D. C., July 1.
Publisher Boone County Recorder
Burlington, Ky.

Sir:—Your attention is invited to amended paragraph 3, section 136, of the Postal Laws and Regulations, appearing in the December, 1911, Postal Guide, reading as follows:

"The right of publishers to extend in good faith credit on subscriptions is recognized and will not be abridged, and although all subscriptions are regarded as expiring with the period for which they were obtained, nevertheless, in order to give an opportunity to secure renewals, copies of the publications will be accepted for mailing to subscribers at the usual second-class rates of postage for a period of one year from the date of expiration; but copies sent to persons after one year from the date of the expiration of their subscriptions, unless such subscriptions be expressly renewed for a definite time, together with an actual payment of subscription on a bona fide promise of payment, will not be accepted at the pound rate, but will be accepted at the transient second class rate of one cent for each four ounces or fraction thereof, prepaid by stamps affixed."

The purpose of this regulation is to give publishers a reasonable opportunity to secure renewals of subscriptions, and at the same time relieve the postal service of the burden of carrying copies of publications as to subscribers at the usual second-class rates of postage to persons who are not such in fact.

In order that the Department may ascertain whether the regulation is being uniformly complied with, you are requested to furnish, with regard to the circulation of the next issue of your publication, the information asked on the reverse side of this sheet, sending it under cover of the inclosed official envelope, which requires no postage.

Respectfully,
JAMES J. BRITT
Third Assistant Postmaster General.

It will be seen by the above that it is positively necessary for the Recorder to cut from its subscription list the names of all those who are more than one year behind with their subscription. If you can not come in to pay send to the Recorder a postal stating when you will pay that your paper may continue to come. It could be continued if the publisher would make an affidavit and send to the Third Assistant Postmaster General stating that all subscriptions are paid up, or, are promised to be paid at a given time, but this he cannot do as he would lay himself liable to a fine of $100 to $500. Please let the Recorder hear from you before next publication day.

Sixty-seven hundred popular trees in Letcher county were sold for $75,000, the deal being the largest in this timber for many years.

Cowpeas in Corn.

The time of planting may be from late June to the middle of July. When planted as late as the middle of July, seed cannot be matured, and the soil good, a fair hay crop or a crop to be plowed under for green manure may be secured. When planted for hay, they should be sown by the first days of June. Cowpeas are warm water plants and cannot endure cold, wet weather.

Two methods are employed—one planting in the hills or drift row with the corn. This is best done with a cowpea attachment to the planter. When planted in this manner it is not safe to plant too early for the reasons above stated.

The amount of seed per acre for this method will vary from a gallon to two gallons, depending on the variety and the quality of the seed.

The Whippoorwill is mostly used for this method, but where the corn is to be cut for fodder, or especially when put in the silos, the Little Black or the Clay may be better. These latter two are rather late and very heavy vines. The peas of the Little Black are very small, hence not so much weight or measure of seed per acre would be required as the larger kinds.

This method is perhaps best when the crop is to be harvested and stored. When the crop is to be pastured off with lambs or pigs, a popular way is to sow the peas between the corn rows when the corn is laid by. It will be best to lay by corn a little earlier than would be otherwise desired, so the peas can get a start before the ground is shaded too much.

The best method to plant in this way is with a one-horse grain drill. When the seed is broadcasted ahead of the cultivator many of them do not get well covered and are thus wasted and the price of seed is so high that we must avoid the waste if possible. Some drill three and some five rows between the corn rows. New Era is the best for this method of seeding.—S. M. Jordan in Missouri Ruralist.

Those Republicans who want President Taft to resign as a Republican nominee for president will find that he is not of that kind of material.

The first game on the 4th was a pitchers' battle, in which Tolin held Erlanger to four hits, while Victor turned the same trick on Burlington. The features of the afternoon game were the sensational work of Tavlin, center fielder for Erlanger, and Huey's pitching for Burlington, while Carter's slants and curves were fooling Burlington. In the morning game Victor struck out 13 men in seven innings and Tolin 9. In the afternoon game Huey struck out 15 and Carter 3. Burlington won 4 to 0. Erlanger's Harry Shearer fell when running from third base home, hurting his leg badly he had to retire from the game.

I certainly do appreciate your kindness and remembrances as friends of mine. Lena Tanner.

Cowpeas in Corn.

The time of planting may be from late corn planting time up to the middle of July. When planted late as the middle of July, seed cannot be matured, but when the weather is seasonable and the soil good, a fair hay crop or a crop to be plowed under for green manure may be secured. When planted for hay, they should be sown by the first days of June. Cowpeas are warm weather plants and cannot endure cold, wet weather.

Two methods are employed—one planting in the hills or drill rows with corn. This is best done with a cowpea attachment to the planter. When planted in this manner it is not safe to plant too early for the reasons above stated.

The amount of seed per acre for this method will vary from a gallon to two gallons, depending on the variety and the quality of the seed.

The Whippoorwill are mostly used for this method, but where the corn is to be cut for fodder, or especially when put in the silo, the Little Black or the Clay may be better. These latter two are rather late and very heavy vines. The peas of the Little Black are very small, hence not so much weight or measure of seed per acre would be required as the larger kinds. This method is perhaps best when the crop is to be harvested and stored. When the crop is to be pastured off with lambs or pigs, a popular way is to sow the peas between the corn rows when the corn is laid by. It will be best to lay by corn a little earlier than would be otherwise desired, so the peas can get a start before the ground is shaded too much. The best method to plant in this way is with a one-horse grain drill. When the seed are broadcasted ahead of the cultivator many of them do not get well covered and are thus wasted and the price of seed is so high that we must avoid the waste if possible. Some drill three and some five rows between the corn rows. New Era is the best sort for this method of seeding.—S. M. Jordan in Missouri Ruralist.

Those Republicans who want President Taft to resign as a Republican nominee for president will find that he is not of that kind of material.

A Girl's Wild Midnight Ride.

To warn people of a fearful forest fire in the Catskills a young girl rode horse back at midnight and saved many lives. Her deed was glorious but lives are often saved by Dr. King's New Discovery in curing lung trouble, coughs and colds which might have ended in consumption or pneumonia. "It cured me of a dreadful cough and lung disease," writes W. E. Patterson, Wellington, Texas, "after four in our family had died with consumption, and I gained 37 pounds." Nothing so sure and safe for all throat and lung troubles. Price 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free. Guaranteed by all dealers.

Erlanger at Burlington.

Quite a number of Erlanger young people spent the fourth in Burlington, and saw their team beat Burlington in two games, making four consecutive games in which Erlanger has defeated Burlington this season, the scores being 8 to 0, 2 to 0, 2 to 6, 3 to 4. The first game on the 4th was a pitchers battle, in which Tolin held Erlanger to four hits while Victor turned the same trick on Burlington. The features of the afternoon game were the sensational work of Tavin, center fielder for Erlanger, and Huey's pitching for Burlington, while Carter's slants and curves were forcing Burlington in the morning game Victor struck out 13 men in seven innings and Tolin 9. In the afternoon game Huey struck out 15 and Carter 3. Burlington hits and Erlanger 10. In the afternoon game Harry Shearer fell when running from third base home, hurting his ankle and he had to retire from the game.

I am unable to express in words the gratitude I feel I owe to my many friends, who so kindly cast their votes for me during the Recorder's popularity contest. It certainly was a surprise to me to come out victorious, while I knew of a good many whose votes I received and at the same time, if I should attempt to thank you all in person, I know a great many would be slighted, for I received so many votes that I know not who gave them to me. I certainly do appreciate your kindness and remembrances as friends of mine. Lena Tanner.

Atlanta Journal.

Woodrow Wilson fits the era. No better choice could have been made.—Boston Globe.

The news that Woodrow Wilson has been nominated for the presidency seems almost too good to be true.—Baltimore Sun.

Democracy puts forward its strongest candidate for the presidency in Woodrow Wilson, of New Jersey.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

His nomination is a conspicuous and decisive victory for a great man, a great party and a great people.—Nashville Tennessean and American.

While Woodrow Wilson is the beneficiary of the wrong done to Champ Clark, the Republic doubts not that he is the innocent beneficiary.—St. Louis Republic.

No party ever nominated a candidate for President more free to enter the presidency as the impartial representative of the whole people.—Philadelphia Record.

The first duty of every honest man and newspaper toward the result at Baltimore is to recognize in the clearest and most specific manner possible that a great progressive victory has been won.—Indianapolis Star.

With a suitable campaign of public education no loyal Republican and patriotic American need fear the outcome. The American people are not yet ready to accept an academic agitator as their chief magistrate.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

The ticket will meet with general satisfaction. It will grow in popular esteem as the campaign progresses. The weakness of Wilson as a candidate before the convention was held—his lack of ability to touch the popular enthusiasm—will disappear as the campaign progresses.—Evansville Courier.

Woodrow Wilson, of New Jersey, nominated for President by the United States by the Democrats after one of the most remarkable contests in the history of American politics, will be accepted by every State in the Union as the wisest and best choice that could possibly have been made.—Pittsburg Post.

Gov. Wilson is a moderate and sane radical, a constructive radical, a student of history, political science and economics. He is a serious thinker and capable administrator. His record as executive of New Jersey, although not rich, for it is a new figure in political life, is in every way creditable and promising.—Chicago Record-Herald.

The Democratic party is to be congratulated upon the choice of Gov. Wilson. It also owes a debt of thanks to Mr. Bryan, whose successful fight in the convention against a reactionary plutocracy will go down to posterity as one of the most dramatic exhibitions of the moral influence of a great leader of the people our political history has shown.—Chicago Tribune, Ind. Republican.

In the light of final events Wilson was Bryan's man Friday. If the Nebraska had any ultimate designs upon the convention himself it will, of course, never be revealed, but he stood after the opening of the session as the sponsor for Wilson and played the game of fairy godmother. From a Republican point of view it might as well have been Wilson as Clark—either can be beaten.—Commercial Tribune.

Poultry Clubs Next.

Virginia and Tennessee are going to have poultry clubs supplemental to the Southern Boys' Corn Clubs, in which boys and girls will be eligible to membership. These poultry clubs will be under the sanction of the division of animal husbandry of the Bureau of Animal Industry and the division of co-operative farm demonstration of the Department of Agriculture.

While there are more than 60,000 boys who are now members of corn clubs, the officials believe that the children will be given a wider knowledge of agriculture by the organization of poultry clubs than is now afforded simply through the raising of corn. The main object will be to instill in the children a love for farming at the same time the boys and girls will be able to gain real profit from the proceeds of their miniature farms. Should the work prove a success it will be extended to other States.

A Hero In A Lighthouse.

For years J. S. Donahue, So. Haven, Mich., a civil war captain, as a lighthouse keeper, saved awful wrecks, but a queer fact is, he might have been a wreck himself. If Electric Bitters had not prevented. "They cured me of kidney trouble and chills," he writes, "after I had taken other so-called cures for years, without benefit and they also improved my sight. Now, at seventy, I am feeling fine." For dyspepsia, indigestion, all stomach liver and kidney troubles, they're without equal. Try them. Only 50 cents at all dealers.

For Sale—Four year old cow and calf. Will sell with full guarantee. Apply to Elmer County, Burlington, Ky.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

To Teachers and Trustees:
The proper medium for the settlement of controversies arising between teachers and trustees is the county Superintendent of schools. Many teachers, trustees and citizens have a custom of writing the State Superintendent of Public Instruction about every little detail of school management. I have no objection to answering these inquiries and it is always a pleasure to render assistance to any school official or citizen interested in the welfare of the school. These requests often state only one side of the question and it is impossible to give a fair decision until we have heard both sides. In view of these facts, I think it wise and just for all trustees, teachers and citizens to submit these questions first to the county superintendent. When an opinion is needed the county superintendent is the proper person to ask for an opinion from the State office. When this is done, he can give both sides of the question and the State office can render an intelligent opinion. Strictly speaking I have no authority to give an opinion, except upon an appeal from the decision of the county superintendent or upon his request. I desire to make this appeal to all teachers and trustees, to submit your questions first to the county superintendent, who is the proper person to decide all questions of difference and doubt regarding the schools of his county.

Yours very truly,
BARKSDALE HAMLET,
Superintendent.

To Control Floods.

Delegates from fifteen states, including governors, congressmen and other state officials, recently responded to the call of Governor Deese, of Illinois, to meet at Chicago, for the purpose of opening up an organized effort to control floods in the Mississippi Valley and to reclaim land along the banks of rivers that are now in avarage.

Mr. R. I. Randolph, of Chicago, secretary of the Illinois Rivers and Lakes commission said: "Every great flood in the Mississippi valley has brought forth a multitude of plans and schemes for preventing a recurrence of the calamity."

"Immediately following the recent flood an appeal was made to Congress for an appropriation of $1,000,000 and an annual appropriation of $8,000,000 for three years."

"If the whole country is to help pay for these improvements, the whole country should benefit from them. I would suggest that the government take over the bottom lands, build levees high, long and strong enough to protect the bottom lands, and then sell that bottom land at rates which will return to the treasury the money spent in reclamation."

Seed Corn Preservation.

Officials of the Bureau of Plant Industry are trying to impress upon farmers the necessity for proper preservation of seed corn and are already laying out plans for spreading the gospel of good seed so that when autumn comes more farmers will become educated in this new idea. Last year extensive tests conducted by the officials of the Bureau with the aid of co-operating farmers, showed that good seed preservation increased production to the extent of five bushels to the acre. The results are similar to those of other seasons in other localities and demonstrate that as a savings bank the seed corn rack returns a large interest on the investment.

The Democratic party, true to its pledge to the people of the country nominated a progressive. There is going to be a mighty interesting campaign this fall—Cincinnati Enquirer.

How Wilson Won Battle.

refused to answer unless it were made more explicit.

Another asked whether he considered a refusal to support a candidate receiving Murphy's support the same as a refusal to support for president a man nominated by Murphy's support.

"Does not the law make a difference," replied Mr. Bryan, "between the lawyer who defends a criminal after the crime has been committed, and the man who assists in the commission of crime?"

Mr. Bryan then announced his vote for Woodrow Wilson and retired to his seat in the Nebraska delegation; and he continued to cast his vote for Wilson throughout the night.

Numerous efforts to break both the unit rule as applied to instructed delegations and the two-third rule as applied to the nomination were made previous to the Saturday night adjournment. The first of these applied to Ohio and was successful, the move adding ten votes to the Wilson strength. But the resolution that applied to Ohio did not cover other states, and the enforcing of the rule led to wrangles on every ballot.

At the close of the twenty-fifth ballot late Saturday night Senator Stone of Missouri asked unanimous consent for the consideration of a motion providing that beginning with the twenty-eighth ballot the lowest man should drop out of the race, and on the final ballot the candidate receiving the majority of the votes cast should be the party nominee. The Texas delegation offered immediate objection, and the long, tedious calling of the roll of states continued.

With Monday came two important and interesting features. One was the apparent cracking of the deadlock in favor of Wilson. Despite the desperate endeavors of the Clark forces, the governor's vote increased steadily on every ballot until, on the thirty-ninth, it stood at 50 1/2. After the fortieth ballot the Wilson vote fell off to 49 1/2, his net gain over the first ballot being 8 1/2. When Wilson was at the high water mark on Monday, Clark had slumped to 423 but went up again to 430 before adjournment. At this time it seemed that the Illinois delegation held the key to the situation.

The other big event of the day was the exhortation of Bryan by John B. Stanchfield of New York. This was Murphy's first return blow, and it was a hard one. Praising the New York delegation, Stanchfield said:

"It is by common consent the most representative of any that ever came to a national convention from New York. It is the 'puppets of war' that Mr. Bryan refers to, we say to that money-grubbing, office-seeking, public-hunting marplot of Nebraska."

Stanchfield could not conclude the sentence. It was drowned in a burst of cheers.

While the speaker delivered this attack Bryan sat quietly in his seat. He watched Stanchfield closely and occasionally smiled.

"I desire to say again, the vote of New York is vital to success," continued Mr. Stanchfield. "And no man can go forth from this convention stigmatized and branded with the mark of Bryanism upon him and come within half a million votes of success."

"When Mr. Bryan makes the statement that these delegates from New York are under the influence of Morgan and Ryan and Belmont, the 'plutocrats' of this convention, he omits one name. Outside of the three he has named, the richest and most powerful plutocrat on the floor is the gentleman from Nebraska himself."

All day the delegates were in fight.

GALLATIN COUNTY.

(Warsaw Independent.) The corn crop of Gallatin, although getting a late start, promises, if future conditions are favorable, to be better than it was last year. The late rains have been of untold benefit, and have, in rapid growth of the crop, caused it to almost overcome its handicap of the late start.

The heavy rains of Saturday, Sunday and Monday afforded all the farmers whose tobacco setting was unfinished an opportunity to finish the job, and practically all availed themselves of it. A great deal of resetting was necessary as many plants had died from the first setting. About 80 per cent. of last year's crop is a fair estimate for the acreage and pounds this year in Gallatin, and when the tobacco is stripped out of the acreage, the belief this estimate will be close to a correct one. The crop is about one month late this year, but with fair conditions from now on, this handicap can be overcome. Naturally, the pessimist thinks the tobacco crop in Gallatin this year will be only about 20 per cent. of the average yield, but we have found so many of the pessimistic predictions fail of verification, that they are taken with liberal quantities of salt.

Now is the time when plenty of milk is desirable for the market. Prices are at their best and the cows should be fed so as to make the most milk.

ing mood, and once there was a genuine riot of which Bryan was the center. He resented as an insult the action of some Clark enthusiasts in placing in front of the Commoner a banner bearing words of praise of Clark attributed to Bryan in 1916. Missouri, New Jersey and Nebraska delegates "mixed it up," and even some press correspondents took a hand. Then the police separated the belligerents and later A. M. Dockery, Dave Francis sent a telegram to Bryan, disclaiming for the Missouri delegation any connection with the banner.

Tired and out of temper, the delegates assembled at noon Tuesday, determined to win matters quickly if possible. Of the first ballot of the day, the forty-third, Illinois switched over to Wilson and on the succeeding ballots the vote of the governor rapidly increased. After the forty-fifth Senator Bankhead arose and withdrew the name of Oscar Underwood. "That means Wilson," said the managers for Clark. Then Governor Foss' name also was withdrawn, whereupon Senator Stone and ex-Governor Francis gave up hope for the speaker. They formally released the Clark delegates from their pledges, and it seemed all over but the shouting. But the Tammany bunch and some others were still stubborn and Fitzgerald of New York objected to the unanimous nomination of Wilson by acclamation. So further calling of the roll was necessary.

Every strategy known in political generalship was tried to stampede the convention for the different candidates. No convention in the history of this country has seen such wild demonstrations as have been witnessed in this one at Baltimore.

While Tuesday's dramatic incident, arising over the selection of a temporary chairman, was the cause of almost unprecedented turmoil, there was nothing even bordering on a demonstration. It was just plain fight—not enthusiasm.

Even the speech of Temporary Chairman Parker did not arouse the response so characteristic of Democratic conventions of the past, and the convention showed nothing but a fighting mood until after the incident of the Bryan resolution of Thursday evening and the beginning of the nominating speeches.

The Clark and Wilson forces struggled valiantly to make the greater showing for their respective candidates. While Clark was showing the greater voting strength, the lung power of the thousands of college boys in the Wilson following gave to him an advantage so far as continued effort at noise-making was concerned.

The terrific din of Thursday night which was started by the Clark hosts when Senator Reed named the speaker for the Democratic nomination continued unabated for one and a quarter hours, and in it there seemed to be employed every noise-making implement ever invented.

Great as was the Clark demonstration, however, it did not compare in noise with that led by the Princeton boys when Judge Westcott named the New Jersey executive. For more than one and a half hours the din continued, the lusty youngsters seeming to glory in their ability to keep it up.

Of all of the demonstrations of Thursday night the most amusing was that started by a man in the press stand for Governor Baldwin, when the name of the Connecticut executive was entered in the race for the nomination. Realizing that the fourteen delegates from Connecticut could not successfully compete with the stronger following of the other candidates, the men in the press stand volunteered a noisy assistance which they continued for more than twenty minutes and which subsided only when the chair threatened to clear the press stand if the reporters did not stop. The many star writers in the press stand, men whose reputations for genius are world-wide, led the Baldwin demonstration, and introduced into it all the elements of a first-class vaudeville show or a Grid-iron club dinner. It was the one really spontaneous and amusing demonstration of the long week.

"Alfalfa Bill" Murry, a Wilson delegate from Oklahoma, was the acknowledged leader of the Wilson "demonstrators" among the delegates. And time "Alfalfa Bill" wanted to start something he would raise his tattered head, wave his long arms at the north gallery where a group of Princeton boys had seats, and let out a wild west yell. It never failed to produce results. It was such a move that started the demonstration on Saturday night when on the twenty-fourth ballot the New Jersey executive passed the four hundred mark.

Of the many visitors to the convention none created more interest than Mrs. William H. Taft, when on Thursday afternoon and evening she occupied a seat in the box immediately back of the speaker's stand. She was the guest of Mrs. Norman H. Mack.

Mrs. Taft entered the convention hall just before Temporary Chairman Parker surrendered the gavel to Permanent Chairman James. The crowd watched the first lady of the land with eager interest as she listened to the denunciation of her distinguished husband and the arraignment of his administration contained in the speech of the permanent chairman. But if they expected any evidences of displeasure on the part of Mrs. Taft they were disappointed, for the only smile at each telling point, and at the conclusion of the address applauded vigorously. She did not applaud, or even smile, when Mr. James turned his attention from President Taft to Colonel Roosevelt and included the latter in his arraignment and among those to whom the Democratic party was unalterably opposed.

As Mrs. Taft entered the box with Mrs. Mack, a gray-haired southerner near enough to distinguish her started an ovation for her. When pleasantly chided for his actions by a younger acquaintance he replied:

"The first lady of this land, or any lady, is entitled to the courtesy of every gentleman, and I would have you know, sir, that the Democrats of the South are gentlemen."

Mr. Bryan and his followers made political capital from the appearance in the convention of Ryan and Belmont. They acted as a red rag to a bull on the Bryan cohorts. Belmont occupied a conspicuous place in the first row in the box immediately back of the speaker, while Ryan, though occupying a seat with the Virginia delegation ordinarily, was on the speaker's stand a number of times. Ryan wore a plain business suit, and so far as clothing was concerned could not have been distinguished from any of the other delegates. Belmont attended most of the evening sessions dressed in evening clothes, the broad expanse of his waist shirt making him easily distinguishable from others around him.

Bryan, when not on the stand, occupied a seat with the Nebraska delegation immediately in front of the speaker and facing Belmont. During the sessions as the delegates would flock around the Nebraska seeking his advice or counsel, or upbraiding him for his opposition, he would point his finger at Belmont to emphasize his points, and his action would nearly always result in an uproar.

On Thursday night, at the close of Senator Reed's speech naming Clark, the speaker's beautiful daughter stepped onto a chair in the gallery, and with a big American flag wrapped around her, and another in each hand, led the cheering for her father. She was the only woman who figured conspicuously in the demonstrations.

Baltimore is by no means a convention city. It is a city of homes with limited hotel accommodations, which made the housing of the big crowd a hard problem to solve. This shortage of hotel accommodations was met by appealing to the people of the city to open their homes to the visitors. The committee in charge established a room-renting agency where those willing to accommodate the Democratic guests could list their rooms. The following is a sample of what was offered:

"I should like you to rent one of my rooms for me," said an amiable-looking elderly lady in weeds. "It is a large room and it is furnished with antique mahogany furniture. The bureau belonged to my great grandmother. It's a Sheraton, and you know how few Sheraton bureaus there are left in this country. If you could just send some western senator, or governor, or even a congressman to look at it, I know they would take it right away, and it would be such a treat for them to live, even for just a few days, in a room furnished with old mahogany. My husband traveled in the west once, and he told me all the furniture was just made of pine. He did not seem to like the west at all. You will be sure to send me a western governor or senator," she repeated as she moved away to give place to another woman with rooms to rent.

The 1909 Pooled Tobacco.

Lexington, Ky., July 1.—Only 386 hogheads of tobacco of the Burley Society pool of 1909 remain unsold and as this will be disposed of this week the work of preparing for the division of the remainder of the money of the pool among the growers will begin next week and a full settlement of the entire pool will be made as soon as the accounts and checks of the individual members of the pool can be made out. Before September 1st all of the members of the pool probably will have received their money. These were the conclusions reached at a meeting of the Executive Board of the Society held here today. It was ordered that the unsold tobacco be sold at once on the Louisville and Cincinnati markets. This can be easily done this week and it is not believed that the Burley Tobacco Company will have to take over any of the tobacco, as it expected to do it was not all sold on the open market. It was decided by the Executive Committee to hold a meeting in Louisville next week to consider a number of details in connection with the operation of the Burley Company's manufacturing plant there.

The Executive Committee directed the attorneys to draw up the deed for the High Oaks Sanatorium property recently purchased in this city for warehouse and factory purposes, appointed a committee to meet in Lexington Friday to view the property and decided upon the dimensions of the loose-leaf warehouse, the first building to be constructed and get the work of construction under way as soon as possible. This warehouse, which will be one of the largest in Kentucky will be completed and opened for business by December 1. The matter of purchasing the privately-owned loose-leaf warehouse at Carrollton was taken up and the details of negotiation left to a special committee.

President Clarence L. Bus was not present to-day. He has been called to Louisville following the recent death of a brother there.

WHY TROYS CARRY MORE

than any other make of the same size

- 1—A TROY is bigger at the mouth than any other wagon. Look at the points marked "A". Then figure for yourself where the biggest strain comes. It's at the mouth of the skids.
- 2—A TROY 3 in. skids really measures 3 1/4 in. at the collar. See point marked "B". That makes the TROY a full size larger all the way through—axles, wheels, etc. Don't you want that added margin of safety?
- 3—The skids are oval, not round. See "A" again. Therefore they take in the full strength of the axles—just where the strength is needed most.
- 4—TROY axles are strictly clear, first-quality hickory. No other timber has the same carrying strength or resiliency. This is just an axle and skids talk. These things count—but they aren't all. We want you to know the TROY all over—from tongue to tail-board. Come in and let us show you why the TROY is the one best from every angle. You will like the price too—it's right.

Rouse's Ood Work.
The following from last Tuesday's Kentucky Post shows that our young Congressman, Arthur Rouse, is making a great showing in behalf of this district in the matter of successful work:
"Word was received in Covington this morning by The Post from its special correspondent in Washington, that the congressional committee on military affairs had voted today to report favorably upon Congressman Arthur Rouse's measure transferring the military reservation of Ft. Thomas from the War to the Navy Department. If this is carried out, the famous post will be under the Marine Corps. "It had practically been decided by the powers that be to desert the Ft. Thomas reservation entirely, when Rouse got busy. He had a number of conferences with Secretary of War Stimson without effect. Finally Rouse told Stimson he would secure action through Congress."
"Then Stimson got busy and ordered part of a regiment to Ft. Thomas. This is not considered a reversal of Rouse's policy, but merely a temporary thing, so as to kill Rouse's bill. However, Rouse hopes to have the measure become law, in which case the post would be permanently used by the Marine Corps."

THE PRODIGAL JUDGE

CHAPTER XVIII.

Betty Leaves Belle Plain.

Hannibal had devoted himself loyally to the judge's glorification, and Betty heard all about the letter, the snuffing of the candles and the reward of five thousand dollars. It vastly increased the child's sense of importance and satisfaction when he discovered she had known nothing of these matters until he told her of them.

"Why, where would Judge Price get so much money, Hannibal?" she asked, greatly astonished.

"He won't have to get it, Miss Betty; Mr. Mahaffy says he don't reckon no one will ever tell who wrote the letter—he 'lows the man who done that will keep pretty mum—he just dassent tell!" the boy explained.

"No, I suppose not—" and Betty saw that perhaps, after all, the judge had not assumed any very great financial responsibility.

"He can't be a coward, though, Hannibal!" she added, for she understood that the risk of personal violence which he ran was genuine. She had formed her own unsympathetic estimate of him that day at Boggs' race-track; Mahaffy in his blackest hour could have done nothing to him. Twice since then she had met him in Raleigh, which had only served to fix that first impression.

"Miss Betty, he's just like my Uncle Bob was—he ain't afraid of nothing!" He toted them pistols of his—loaded. "If you notice good you can see where they bulge out his coat." Hannibal's eyes, very round and big, looked up into hers.

"Is he as poor as he seems, Hannibal?" inquired Betty.

"He never has no money, Miss Betty, but I don't reckon he's what a body would call poor."

It might have baffled a far more mature intelligence than Hannibal's to comprehend those peculiar processes by which the judge sustained himself and his intimate fellowship with adversity—that it was his magnificence of mind which made the squalor of his daily life seem merely a passing phase—but the boy had managed to point a delicate distinction, and Betty grasped something of the hope and faith which never quite died out in Sloum Price's indomitable breast.

"But you always have enough to eat, dear?" she questioned anxiously.

Hannibal promptly reassured her on this point. "You wouldn't let me think anything that was not true, Hannibal—you are quite sure you have never been hungry?"

"Never, Miss Betty; honest!"

Betty gave a sigh of relief. She had been reproaching herself for her neglect of the child; she had meant to do so much for him and had done nothing! Now it was too late for her personally to interest herself in his behalf, yet before she left for the east she would provide for him. If she had felt it was possible to trust the judge she would have made him her agent, but even in his best aspect he seemed a dubious dependence. Tom, for quite different reasons, was equally out of the question. She thought of Mr. Mahaffy.

"What kind of a man is Mr. Mahaffy, Hannibal?"

"He's an awful nice man, Miss Betty, only he never lets on; a body's got to find it out for his own self—he ain't like the judge."

"Does he—drink, too, Hannibal?" questioned Betty.

"Oh, yes, when he can get the lick, he does." It was evident that Hannibal was cheerfully tolerant of this weakness on the part of the austere Mahaffy. By this time Betty was ready to weep over the child, with his knowledge of shabby vice, and his fresh young faith in those old tattered demagogues.

"But, no matter what they do, they are very, very kind to you?" she continued tremulously.

"Yes, ma'am—why, Miss Betty, they're lovely men!"

"And do you ever hear the things spoken of you learned about at Mrs. Perris' Sunday-school?"

"When the judge is drunk he talks a heap about 'em. It's beautiful to hear him then; you'd love it, Miss Betty," and Hannibal smiled up sweetly into her face.

"Does he have you go to Sunday-school in Raleigh?"

The boy shook his head.

"I ain't got no clothes that's fitten to wear, nor no pennies to give, but the judge, he 'lows that as soon as he can make a raise I got to go, and he's learning me my letters—but we ain't no book. Miss Betty, I reckon it'd stump you some to guess how he's fixed it for me to learn?"

"He's drawn the letters for you, is that the way?" In spite of herself, Betty was experiencing a certain revulsion of feeling where the judge and Mahaffy were concerned. They were doubtless bad enough, but they could have been worse.

"No, ma'am; he done soaked the label off one of Mr. Peggie's whisky bottles and pasted it on the wall just as high as my chin, so I can see it good, and he's learning me that—what! Maybe you've seen that kind of bottle I mean—Peggie's Mississippi bottle; Pure Corn Whisky!" But Hannibal's bright little face fell. He was quick to see that the educational system devised by the judge did not impress Betty at all favorably. She drew him into her arms.

"You shall have my books—the books I learned to read out of when I was a little girl, Hannibal!"

"I like learning from the label pretty well," said Hannibal loyally.

"But you'll like the books better, dear, when you see them. I know just where they are, for I happened on them on a shelf in the library only the other day."

After they had found and examined the books and Hannibal had grudgingly admitted that they might possess certain points of advantage over the label, he and Betty went out for a walk. It was now late afternoon and the sun was sinking behind the wall of the forest that rose along the Arkansas coast. Their steps had led them to the terrace—where they stood looking off into the west. It was here that Betty had said good-bye to Bruce Carrington—it might have been months ago, and it was only days. She thought of Charlie—Charlie, with his youth and hope and high courage—unwittingly enough he had led him on to his death! A sob rose in her throat.

Hannibal looked up into her face. The memory of his own loss was never very long absent from his mind, and Miss Betty had been the victim of a similarly minister tragedy. He recalled those first awful days of loneliness through which he had lived, when there was no Uncle Bob—soft-voiced, smiling and infinitely companionable.

"Why, Hannibal, you are crying—what about, dear?" asked Betty suddenly.

"No, ma'am; I ain't crying," said Hannibal stoutly, but his wet lashes gave the lie to his words.

"Are you homesick—do you wish to go back to the judge and Mr. Mahaffy?"

"No, ma'am—it ain't that—I was just thinking."

"Thinking—about what, dear?"

"About my Uncle Bob." The small face was very wistful.

"Oh—and you still miss him so much, Hannibal?"

"I bet I do—I reckon anybody who knew Uncle Bob would never get over missing him; they just count, Miss Betty!" The judge is mighty kind, and so is Mr. Mahaffy—they're awful kind, Miss Betty, and it seems like they get kinder all the time—but with Uncle Bob, when he liked you, he just laid himself out to let you know it!"

"That does make a great difference, doesn't it?" agreed Betty sadly, and two piteous tearful eyes were bent upon him.

"Don't you reckon if Uncle Bob is alive, like the judge says, and he's ever going to find me, he had ought to be here by now?" continued Hannibal anxiously.

"But it hasn't been such a great while, Hannibal; it's only that—so much has happened to you. If he was very badly hurt it may have been weeks before he could travel; and then when he could, perhaps he went back to that tavern to try to learn what had become of you. But we may be quite certain he will never abandon his search until he has made every possible effort to find you, dear! That means he will sooner or later come to west Tennessee, for there will always be the hope that you have found your way here."

"Sometimes I get mighty tired waiting, Miss Betty," confessed the boy. "Seems like I just couldn't wait no longer—" He sighed gently, and then his face cleared. "You reckon he'll come most any time, don't you, Miss Betty?"

"Yes, Hannibal; any day or hour!"

"Whoop!" muttered Hannibal softly under his breath. Presently he asked: "Where does that branch take you to?" He nodded toward the bayou at the foot of the terraced bluff.

"It empties into the river," answered Betty.

Hannibal saw a small skiff beached among the cottonwoods that grew along the edge and his eyes lighted up instantly. He had a juvenile passion for boats.

"Why, you got a boat, ain't you, Miss Betty?" This was a charming and an important discovery.

"Would you like to go down to it?" inquired Betty.

"Decid I would! Does she leak any, Miss Betty?"

"I don't know about that. Do boats usually leak, Hannibal?"

"Why, you ain't ever been out rowing her, Miss Betty, have you?—and there ain't no better fun than rowing a boat!" They had started down the path.

"I used to think that, too, Hannibal; how do you suppose it is that when people grow up they forget all about the really nice things they might do?"

"What use is she if you don't go rowing in her?" persisted Hannibal.

"Oh, but it is used. Mr. Tom uses it in crossing to the other side where they are clearing land for cotton. It saves him a long walk or ride about the head of the bayou."

"Like I said, Miss Betty, I reckon it'd stump you some to guess how he's fixed it for me to learn?"

"He's drawn the letters for you, is that the way?" In spite of herself, Betty was experiencing a certain revulsion of feeling where the judge and Mahaffy were concerned. They were doubtless bad enough, but they could have been worse.

"No, ma'am; he done soaked the label off one of Mr. Peggie's whisky bottles and pasted it on the wall just as high as my chin, so I can see it good, and he's learning me that—what! Maybe you've seen that kind of bottle I mean—Peggie's Mississippi bottle; Pure Corn Whisky!" But Hannibal's bright little face fell. He was quick to see that the educational system devised by the judge did not im-where and how her own fate was linked with that of this poor white.

"You have been waiting some time to see me?" she asked.

"Ever since about noon."

"You were afraid to come to the house?"

"I didn't want to be seen there."

"And yet you knew I was alone."

"Alone—but how do you know who's watching the place?"

"Do you think there was reason to be afraid of that?" asked Betty.

Again the girl stamped her foot with angry impatience.

"You're just wasting time—just foot in it away—and you ain't got home to spare!"

"You must tell me what I have to feel—I must know more or I shall stay just where I am!"

"Well, then, stay!" The girl turned away, and then as quickly turned back and faced Betty once more. "I reckon he'd kill me if he knew—I reckon I've earned that already—"

"Of whom are you speaking?"

"He'll have you away from here tonight!"

"He? . . . who . . . and what if I refuse to go?"

"Did they ask Charlie Norton whether he wanted to live or die?" came the sharper question.

A shiver passed through Betty. She was seeing it all again—Charlie as he groped among the graves with the hand of death heavy upon him.

A moment later she was alone. The girl had disappeared. There were only the shifting shadows as the wind tossed the branches of the trees, and the bands of golden light that slanted along the empty path. The fear of the unknown leaped up afresh in Betty's soul; in an instant flying feet had borne her to the boy's side.

"Come—come quick, Hannibal!" she gasped out, and seized his hand.

"What is it, Miss Betty? What's the matter?" asked Hannibal as they fled panting up the terrace.

"I don't know—only we must get away from here just as soon as we can!" Then, seeing the look of alarm on the child's face, she added more quietly, "Don't be frightened, dear, only we must go away from Belle Plain at once." But where they were to go, she had not considered.

Reaching the house, they stole to Betty's room. Her well-filled purse was the important thing; that, together with some necessary clothing, went into a small hand-bag.

"You must carry this, Hannibal; if any one sees us leave the house they'll think it something you are taking away," she explained. Hannibal nodded understandingly.

"Don't you trust your niggers, Miss Betty?" he whispered as they went from the room.

"I only trust you, dear!"

"What makes you go? Was it something that 'woman told you?' Are they coming after us, Miss Betty? Is it Captain Murrell?"

"Captain Murrell!" There was less of mystery now, but more of terror, and her hand stole up to her heart, and, white and slim, rested against the black fabric of her dress.

"Don't you be scared, Miss Betty!" said Hannibal.

They went silently from the house and again crossed the lawn to the terrace. Under the leafy arch which canopyed them there was already the deep purple of twilight.

"Do you reckon it were Captain Murrell shot Mr. Norton, Miss Betty?" asked Hannibal in a shuddering whisper.

"Hush—Oh, hush, Hannibal! It is too awful to even speak of—and, sobbing and half hysterical, she covered her face with her hands.

"But where are we going, Miss Betty?" asked the boy.

"I don't know, dear!" She had an agonizing sense of the night's approach and of her own utter helplessness.

"I'll tell you what, Miss Betty, let's go to the judge and Mr. Mahaffy!" said Hannibal.

"Judge Price?" She had not thought of him as a possible protector.

"Why, Miss Betty, ain't I told you he ain't afraid of nothing? We could walk to Raleigh easy if you don't want your niggers to hook up a team for you."

Betty suddenly remembered the carriage which had taken the judge into town; she was sure it had not yet returned.

"We will go to the judge, Hannibal! George, who drove him into Raleigh, has not come back; if we hurry we may meet him on the road."

SMALL BOY GOOD REASONER

Present-Day Conditions Applied to Biblical Incident Showed Power of Deduction.

The Sunday school class of an Indianapolis church, which was made up of small boys, was discussing Lot and how he came to be in Sodom. The teacher told how Abram and Lot had decided to separate and take their flocks and servants in opposite directions and how Lot, probably in his selfishness, had taken what he regarded as the best land, which lay in the direction of Sodom, which was afterward destroyed by fire. The teacher, many did not believe in clothing the talk concerning biblical characters in mystery or phrases that the small boys could not understand, but tried to make them realize that the men of biblical times were subject to the same conditions and influences as are people of today.

"Now, boys," he said, "Lot was not a real bad man. He did not plunge into the wickedness of Sodom immediately. After he left Abram he, no doubt, lived with his family and servants in his tents far outside of the wicked city of Sodom. Then he began to go to the city occasionally. Then he went often, until he came to believe that it was a good place to live in. When the city was destroyed the angels of the Lord led him out of the city.

"Now, James," said the teacher, "I want you to tell me in your own way how you think Lot came to be in Sodom."

"He—he lived in the country at first," replied James, "and didn't come to town at all. Then he got to coming just once in a while—on Sunday nights, when everybody got paid. And then he got to coming through the week, to the ball game, or things like that. And one day, maybe, he came home and said: 'Well, I saw a nice vacant house in Sodom this afternoon and I told the transfer man to come out tomorrow and get our stuff.'"

"That's the way I think Lot came to live in Sodom," concluded James, as he gave a long sigh and sat down.

SEVERE ON HIS OWN WORK

Artist Critic at Last Proved That He Was Above Suspicion of Playing Favorites.

Granville Redmond has arrived in the foremost ranks of California's artists. Being recognized himself after years of striving, he feels competent to pass upon the merits of his contemporary artists.

Recently he left a picture on exhibition at a San Francisco gallery. In the course of the week he went to the place to see how the sale was progressing.

In company with Morcom, the picture dealer, and a few art students, he fell to discussing the pictures.

Every artist therein represented fell under the stroke of his hammer—Keith, Hill, Yard, Judson, Burgdorf, Short, Best, Peters, Latimer, Hansen—all came in for their share of cutting criticism. A word or two at most sufficed to finish them. Redmond made his comments the more substantial by writing them on the margin of the catalogue.

"And this," said Morcom, pointing at last to the picture painted by Redmond, "what do you think of this?"

Redmond was game.

He seized his paper and, quick as a flash, wrote down his criticism: "Darned rotten."

Sounded That Way.

Miss Brown was giving an elaborate description of a blacksmith preparatory to teaching Longfellow's poem to her pupils:

"Now children, we are going to learn a poem today about one who works very hard. He is very large and has great arms that can lift such heavy things! His face is blackened with soot that comes from his great blazing fire! And he wears a dirty black apron and he has a fire that glows, oh, so red, and whenever he makes anything he put it into his fire and then pounds it with a great big hammer, which makes the loudest clanging noise and makes the sparks fly about in every direction. Now, who can tell me what I have been describing?"

A little maid who had listened to these vivid details with eyes twice their natural size sprang to her feet and said in an awed whisper: "The devil."—Housekeeper.

Composite Work.

Throughout the ten years of their existence, the Leggett twins had invariably shared joys, clothes, and gifts of candy or toys. Apparently their mother, the brisk and capable guardian of seven half-orphan, never thought of them separately.

"What are you planning to do this afternoon, Martha?" asked a visiting aunt, who had witnessed a strenuous morning. "Rest, I hope."

"Rest!" said Mrs. Leggett, in a tone of scorn. "I guess not. We've got to take the twins to the dentist. He says that tooth out, and then to the oculist to get a pair of glasses fitted, and then to the shoemaker's to see if he can stretch one of their boots so they can wear it without making such a fuss and saying it hurts every time they put it on."—Youth's Companion.

GOOD PLAN FOR DAIRY HOUSE

Demand Created by Recent Developments for Building Fulfilling Sanitary Requirements.

(By E. KELLY and K. E. PARKS.) Recent developments in dairying have caused a large demand for a dairy house which will fulfill sanitary requirements and at the same time be practical and inexpensive. For those who are striving to improve the quality of their products, such a building is an absolute necessity. Milk which is poured or strained in the barn, or allowed to stand there, is apt to be contaminated by germs and to absorb stable odors. The best practice is to remove the milk to the dairy house as soon as each cow is milked. Milk should be cooled immediately, and the dairy house should be provided with proper facilities for this purpose.

While the dairy house should be conveniently located so that the milkers do not have a long walk from the barn, it must be so placed that it is free from contaminating surroundings. It should be built on a well-drained spot, and the drainage of the dairy house itself should be carried well away from the building. If possible the ground should slope from the dairy house toward the barn, rather than from the barn toward the dairy house.

The principal purpose in building a dairy house is to provide a place where dairy products may be handled apart from everything else. To carry out this idea it is necessary to divide the interior of the building so that utensils will not have to be washed in the same room where the milk is handled. Thorough cleanliness must always be kept in mind; therefore there should be no unnecessary ledges or rough surfaces inside the building, so that it can be quickly and thoroughly cleaned. Ventilators are necessary to keep the air in the milk room fresh and free from musty and undesirable odors, and to carry off steam from the wash room. Windows are of prime importance, as they let in fresh air and sunlight, and facilitate work. In summer the doors and windows should be screened to keep out flies and other insects.

It is imperative that there should be a plentiful supply of cold, running water at the dairy house. If it is not possible to have a regular water system, the supply may be piped from an elevated tank fed by a hydraulic ram, engine, windmill or hand pump.

For the proper sterilization of utensils an abundance of steam or hot water is needed. A pail or can may be clean to the eye and yet may carry numerous germs which will hasten the souring of the milk, cause bad flavor in butter or cheese, or spread contagion. After utensils are washed clean they should be either scalded with boiling water or steamed.

The dairy house should be so built that labor is economized to the greatest extent. To do this the building must be arranged so that unnecessary steps will be avoided.

Rations for Dairy Cattle.

The following general facts should be observed in making up the ration for a dairy cow. A cow should be fed all that she will eat and digest well, giving due consideration to the cost, digestibility and composition of the food fed. The more palatable the food the greater quantity a cow will consume. Variety often increases palatability.

A part of the ration should be succulent in nature, as such food stimulates action in the intestinal tract, which stimulates vigor, thrift and health in the animal. Another important part of the food supply is water. Too often this is not given proper consideration.

Silo and the Dairy.

The careful farmer who gives his personal attention to the making and feeding of silage and is not satisfied with the result is yet to be heard from. The silo seems to be edging mightily near the cornerstone of successful dairying.

Do the Best We Can.

The best cows are none too good when measured by their profits, but all of us cannot afford to go out and buy the best; hence we should try and do the best we can with those we have until we can secure better.

CARE OF MILK IN THE HOME

Frequently Contains Bacteria in Such Large Numbers It Is Not Safe for the Children.

Milk delivered in the cities in the summer months frequently contains bacteria in such large numbers that it is not a safe food for children, especially for infants whose food consists entirely of milk. When it is impossible to obtain milk entirely free from suspicion, it is advisable to pasteurize the milk.

Pasteurization should be done in such a way that disease-producing bacteria as well as those likely to produce intestinal disturbances are destroyed without injuring the flavor or the nutritive value of the milk. This may be accomplished in the home by the use of a simple improvised outfit.

Milk is most conveniently pasteurized in the bottles in which it is delivered. To do this use a small pail with a perforated false bottom. An inverted pail with a few holes punched in it will answer for this purpose. This will raise the bottles from the bottom of the pail, thus allowing a free circulation of the water and preventing bumping of the bottles.

Punch a hole through the cap of one of the bottles and insert a thermometer—a good one with the scale etched on the glass should be used. Set the bottles of milk in the pail and fill the pail with water nearly to the level of the milk. Put the pail on the stove or over a gas flame and heat it until the thermometer in the milk shows not less than 145 degrees nor more than 150 degrees. The bottles should then be removed and allowed to stand from 20 to 30 minutes.

The punctured cap should be replaced with a new one or the bottle covered with an inverted cup. After Taking the popular vote for President in 1902 as a basis, it can be readily calculated how great or how little harm the proposed third party can do to the regular Republican ticket. The nomination of Governor Wilson states away the probability of a third ticket securing any large number of votes from among the progressive Democrats, and it is hardly possible it will receive any votes from the conservatives of that party. It must depend then, almost wholly on what votes it can take away from Mr. Taft.

In a number of states the Republican plurality four years ago was quite small, and it will require a loss of only a small percentage of the Republican vote in those states to give them to the Democratic ticket. For example, if the third party can draw away 11 per cent of the Republican vote in Delaware, 3 per cent in Indiana, 2 per cent in Montana, 12 per cent in Ohio and 20 per cent in West Virginia, the electoral votes of those states will go to Wilson, provided he is able to hold the normal Democratic vote.

The progressive sentiment is supposed to be very strong in California, Idaho, Kansas, Maine, North Dakota and Oregon. To take those states away from Taft the third party will have to poll 40 per cent of the Republican vote in California, 35 per cent in Idaho, 30 per cent in Kansas, 20 per cent in Maine, 45 per cent in N. Dakota and 30 per cent in Oregon.

To secure the electoral vote in any state the third party must defeat Taft and Wilson in such state. Thus to carry California, Connecticut, Idaho, Kansas, New Hampshire, Maine, North Dakota and Oregon, it must receive 60 to 70 per cent of the Republican votes in those states.

Under the system of choosing a President through the medium of electors it frequently occurs that the change of a very few votes would produce a different result. In 1884 a change of less than 1,000 votes in the State of New York would have made Blaine and not Cleveland President; in 1888 a change of 30,000 votes divided between certain states would have made Taft President.

In 1896 a change of 6,000 would have accomplished the same result in 1900. A like change would have given him a majority of the electoral vote as against Taft in 1898.

In 1800 a change of a single electoral vote would have elected Jefferson instead of leaving the office to the House. In 1876 Hayes was declared elected by the joint commission by a majority of but one vote in the Electoral College, New York and Indiana decided the election for Cleveland in 1884 and for Harrison in 1888, and again for Cleveland in 1892. In 1896 the vote of New York would have elected Hancock, and Garfield carried the state by a plurality of only 27,000—Washington Post.

He says Kentucky for officials to impose jail sentences imposed on persons charged with carrying concealed weapons, and in the future he will, according to the law, punish officials who do this. The Attorney General and the State Inspector and Examiner will conduct a rigid examination of such offenses and every official guilty of suspending the statute will be prosecuted for malfeasance or misfeasance in office. The matter will be reported to the Circuit Court judges by the Attorney General.

Few people were surprised at the verdict of the McNamara jury in Lexington but the whole state was shocked and it has put law abiding people of the state, especially those of Lexington and Fayette, to thinking. Such a travesty on justice has hardly ever been known before in the state and the good people of Fayette county are beginning to open their eyes and combat with a very serious protest which will be handled with a determination at once. McNamara was either guilty of murder and should have been given a death sentence or he should have been acquitted.—Winchester Democrat.

A good many Fleming county farmers are determined not to be pinched by another feed famine as they are putting up in which to store away green feed. By this system several very desirable results are likely to follow. One is that as ensilage should be fed under shelter more stock will be housed than heretofore, saving stock running out in all sorts of weather. Another is that there will be a ready supply of feed in the barn. Another very important item is the saving of manure due to feeding in barns.—Winchester Democrat.

Journal of a Female House Fly.

1. Thursday, Nov. 2, 1911. Went into winter quarters. Barely lived through the long, hard winter. 2. April 20, 1912. Came out of winter quarters and laid my first batch of eggs—120 in number—in a manure heap. 3. April 21, 1912. My first 120 eggs hatched. 4. April 23, 1912. Larvae have undergone second molt. 5. April 26, 1912. Larvae transformed into pupae. 7. May 1, 1912. One hundred and twenty full grown flies, 60 of which are females. 8. May 3, 1912. Laid my second batch—120 eggs—this time in the fifth of an uncared for privy. 9. May 13, 1912. One hundred and twenty flies came from my second batch of eggs. Laid my third batch in a kind neighbor's garbage can. 10. May 20, 1912. The city has offered a prize to the school child who will kill the largest number of flies. The boy at the house where I live is killing flies right and left. I think we have all been eating at the same table with him. 11. May 21, 1912. Laid my fourth batch of eggs. Left alone and unhindered. By Sept. 10, 1912, my descendants will be too great to number.

A Georgia Marriage Bill.

A Georgia bill to prohibit the marriage of habitual users of intoxicating liquors or drugs, and of persons afflicted with communicable disease, and practicing attendance as a peculiarly drastic measure. It is not objectionable upon the score of stringency, but rather because it is hardly practical.

To forbid the marriage of persons whose physical condition is not such that it is safe to others for them to marry is perfectly practical. There is little objection to it nowadays, although there are still a few persons whose sentimentality causes them to see more tragedy in forbidding the marriage of consumptives than in allowing it. But to forbid the marriage of habitual drunkards is hardly practical. The antidote for matrimony usually has the grace to sober up, or even to abstain for a period, covering the date of the wedding. There is nothing to prevent his returning to drink, but it would be impossible to prove him habitually a drunkard at the time of his application for license. The law might do no harm, but it could hardly do much good.

About all that the law can do with regard to the whiskey drinker or user of drugs is to provide relief, through divorce, for the other party to the contract. Neither legislation nor advice can head off those who have high hope of reforming the inebriate. While the undertaking usually fails the rule is not without exceptions so, perhaps, it is well that summary legislation cannot deprive the daring main—and nowadays sometimes the rival—of the right to enter into rivalry with the rum demon and fight to a finish.—C. J.

Game Law.

The new game law makes it a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $200, and a jail sentence not exceeding 30 days, to hunt without first obtaining from the county clerk of his respective county a license to hunt, and a fine of from $10 to $25 to hunt without having his license ready to exhibit to anyone demanding same, but any resident owner, landowner or tenant or members of their families may hunt upon their own lands and adjoining farms to theirs without license.

The above applies to residents of Kentucky only. A non-resident is required to pay a license of $15. Said license authorizes the person to hunt in any county in Kentucky during the calendar year within the regulations and restrictions provided by law. A license is obtained by filing an affidavit which the county clerk of the county in which the applicant resides, stating age, place of residence, postoffice address, height, color, color of eyes and hair and the fact whether he can write his or her name, and is required to sign name on the margin of the license. So that the same cannot be in any way transferred, and by paying to the county clerk the tax of $1.00.

One of the grounds on which the constitutionality of the new State primary law is attacked in the courts is that while under the Constitution a legal voter, who is qualified to hold certain offices, under the provisions of the new State law he would have to be at least twenty-two years old before he could be a candidate for an office, and if his birthday was to come in the day before the election he must be at least twenty-one years old.

The novel situation arises from the fact that in filling out his nominating paper the candidate is required to state his party affiliation and that he supported the nominee of said party at the preceding regular election. This would prevent a person who had just turned 21 years from becoming a candidate in the State primary, because he could not state that he had supported the nominee at the previous general election.

Fish and Game Commission.

Although the law passed by the last General Assembly creating the State Fish and Game Commission is now in force and effect, the commission has met a stumbling block in the matter of the appointment of game wardens and much trouble seems to be in store before the question is satisfactorily settled to permit the actual carrying out of the law. Under the law as it was framed it is impossible for the commission to contract any debts, and as there will not be any money to any great amount in the treasury of the commission from license fees much after January next, and because of this fact the commission can not contract with any one for the position of game warden, not to mention the fact that there will be no sufficient funds in the treasury at that time to make payment to the wardens.

While the commission has every reason to believe there will be sufficient funds at that time to meet all demands up to that date, no contracts can be entered into with prospective wardens for any stated sum, according to Mr. Joseph G. Sachs, president of the commission. Since this phase of the situation has come to the surface Mr. Sachs and other members of the commission have given it considerable study, and the problem has become more difficult the more it is considered. The only solution to the problem, he says is for the future welfare of the fish and game problem in Kentucky to volunteer to serve as wardens until the first of next January without actual compensation from the commission, relying wholly on any fines that are made and collected from which to receive remuneration.

Should this step be taken by men interested in the preservation of fish and game—in the future, according to Mr. Sachs, it would do much to remove the embarrassing situation in which the commission finds itself at the present time and insure perfect future for the commission and the work it has planned to do. Unless such action is taken by the well wishers of the new law the commission can not hope to be very effective in its administration and this in itself, according to Mr. Sachs, would work a great hardship on those deeply interested in the preservation of fish and game in Kentucky.

It is also planned by Mr. Sachs to have clubs organized in every county in the State and to have those club members to the commission persons suitable for wardens, and in this way select as wardens men who will devote their time to the work. He says that the people of each county in the State are better able to make selections for wardens than are the members of the commission, and for that reason it is the duty of those interested in the movement to make such recommendations. The commission can feel at liberty to appoint without having to go to time and trouble of ascertaining his ability.—Ex.

The Cost of Lawlessness.

Figures, in dispatches from Frankfort, show that in three years Boone county has cost the State nothing for witness fees in felony cases. Last year the jailer drew from State coffers only $10, and of that amount $80 was for fuel. This it is explained, is not because Boone county is negligent about pursuing lawless persons, but because its citizens are law abiding.

The contrast presented by Bell county is striking. Witness fees in felony cases in a year exceeded $5,000. The transportation commissioners cost $1,200. The jailer drew more than $7,000 in a year for the care of State prisoners, exclusive of county and Federal prisoners. These figures show a great tax lawlessness is, or rather it indicates its cost by showing what part of it is. The total is swelling in various ways. The ill advertising is a heavy tax on the maintenance of prisoners. The "bad man" is an outrageously expensive type of citizen whose activities are as costly to the community as those of a lawless person. He may not be hanged, or sent to prison, but if he escapes imprisonment in court he usually meets with it outside of court in due time.

These figures might profitably be submitted to school children with instructions that they be studied. A little lecture upon them by a school teacher would be very good missionary work in the mountains and outside of the mountains.—Courier-Journal.

The School Teacher.

If you should dip up Lake Erie in a tin cup, pint at a time, and pour in on the big turbine wheels in the wheel-pits at Niagara Falls, you could hardly get them damp. But let a great body of water tumble through the tunnels and the wheels are driven to generate energy sufficient for running all the machinery within two hundred miles of the falls. The water has might only when it falls in large volumes.

The principle holds as good in physics. The sum of the forces of a number of units is greater the closer the aggregation of units.

GREAT CASH RAISING SALE

Owing to the backward season, we find ourselves overstocked, and we must unload and raise the cash, no matter what loss we may sustain. As a rule, we carry no goods over from one season to another, and we will make an effort to do likewise this season. Besides, we must raise a large amount of cash within ten days, and the only way to do so is to sacrifice the stock that it must sell on sight. Read every item carefully and compare them. Never before have you had such opportunities at this time of the year, but we are now forced to do this.

Following is an example of the trouble some of the farmers have had with their crops this year: trying to get a stand: Richard Allen, who lives near Burlington has a piece of land which he planted in corn three times, and failing to secure a stand he sowed it to millet, of which he expects a pretty good crop unless his ill luck continues to pursue him.

"Kitty Kirkpatrick" aged sixteen years and three months, departed this life July 15th. Kitty had been an industrious and successful rather all his life and it is believed that death was the result of too much rodent. Miss Olga Kirkpatrick, who had been a fast friend of Kitty all his long and useful life, had charge of the funeral exercises and gave the deceased an appropriate burial.

J. O. Griffith, of Beaver, the original auto owner in this county, supplemented his old machine, a three passenger vehicle, with a considerable sum of money and is now owner of a handsome five passenger car of about 30 horse power. As Mr. Griffith is a bachelor some are wondering why he wanted a car of that capacity and are quietly discussing the probability of his taking a wedding tour in his new machine.

Many believe that something is working on the growing corn, and that it is the change that is next to the ground. At present the corn prospects in this county are the worst they have been in years and the farmer, who produces more corn this year than will meet his demands will be an exception, and it looks as though a very large majority of Boone county farmers will be the buying class the coming fall and winter.

The recent frequent rains have aided the tobacco to grow as it by magic and the change that has been wrought in the condition of this crop within the past two weeks has been marvelous. The greatest drawback has been the rapid growth of the weeds, but with a few days of dry weather the farmers will get rid of this pest. The outlook for this crop was never better at this time. If prices hold up next winter the tobacco growers ought to get splendid returns for their work and worry.

Capt. Fenton, the old time Ohio river pilot, was in this office last Friday while the mercury seemed determined to climb to the top of the tube, and, of course, the excessive heat was referred to when he drew from his archives a printed report of the weather for the month of July, 1901, showing that it was about the hottest month to date in this latitude, the heat being in the nineties every day in the month except three, and on two of these it was 100 while on the other it was 105. When you think it is not remember the hot July, 1901.

The Erlanger boys broke camp down on Gunpowder creek last Saturday morning after a delightful outing of two weeks. During their stay in the wilderness they were transformed from pale-faced in-door workers to a husky looking set of men of increased weight and improved health, and the raiders at home were pleased to see the great transformation. The only real exciting incident during the outing was when the camp on two of these it was 100 while on the other it was 105. When you think it is not remember the hot July, 1901.

HOT WEATHER POULTRY CARE

Remove Every Window and Substitute Wire Netting for Ventilation of Hen House.

It does not require much hard work to keep a flock in good condition in the summer, but absolute neglect will often completely destroy the winter egg-producing qualities of not only the old hens, but the pullets as well.

If you have not removed every window in the chicken house and substituted wire netting, in order to provide perfect ventilation, do so at once.

Better that the chicks roost in the trees than that they be confined in a vermin-ridden building.

Body lice will worry a flock to death, or so nearly so as to destroy its usefulness. These can be killed, but not easily.

Good insect powder will do the business. It should be applied with a powder spray by one person, while another holds the fowls by the legs so that the powder may reach every part of the skin through the disturbed feathers.

TURKEYS NEED LARGE RANGE

Small Pen in Town is Absolutely Not Suitable for Rearing Meat For Christmas Dinner.

For those persons in town who are thinking of raising a turkey or two in their back yards there is trouble in store. The back yard or pen is not the place for a bird which refuses to be domesticated. W. A. Lippincott, head of the poultry department at the Kansas Agricultural college, says.

The farm is the place to raise turkeys. They must have a good range. During the first few months it is better to give them no grain, but let them forage and eat bugs. If small turkeys are cared for in this way, the fatality will be much less.

Professor Lippincott suggests that you let some farmer take your young turkeys and rear them. You might arrange to pay a little rent to a farmer for allowing your birds to roam in his pastures. Then, along about Thanksgiving, all you have to do is to go out and harvest your turkey.

SHADE FOR CHICKEN COOPS

Shelter is Provided by Means of Sall Cloth Where Trees or Bushes Are Found Scarce.

By means of a sail cloth, duck, or factory cotton curtain shade may easily be supplied chickens where there are no trees or bushes. In such a case

Shading Chicken Coop.

As illustrated herewith the stakes are about 2 feet long, and driven 4 to 6 inches in the ground. The curtain is tied only at the corners. On the windy side the tying is closer to the ground than on the lee side. This is of special help in spring.

Keeping Birds Graded.

Be sure to grade your birds according to size as the weeks pass. When you find that some are outstripping the others, take them away and put them with birds of their own size. If you have to mark the feet and have put on legbands, you will be able to tell the facts regarding them at any time.

Here is where the value of records comes in. Keep an accurate record of every hatch, and then grade the birds without having to feel that if you mix them up you will not be able to tell them again when you want to know certain things about them.

POULTRY NOTES

The contented and happy hen is the laying hen.

Round pebbles will not do for rough edges to grind the grain.

A writer recommends boiled rice for diarrhea in young turks.

Imitate nature as closely as possible and your turkey crop will pay ought to market.

Eggs should always be protected from the hot sun while being taken to market.

Windows should now be out of the poultry house and wire netting tacked in their places.

A floorless brood coop on clean, dry ground is better than one with a board floor in it.

The average hen outlives her usefulness in two years, and is more profitable sent to market.

Whether kept for hatching or market eggs ought to be kept free from any form of moisture.

When eggs are soft shelled the hens are either too fat or do not get enough mineral matter in their feed.

Don't neglect the water supply as plenty of water helps to keep the hens in good laying condition.

A safe rule to follow in chick feeding is to give them just as much as they will clean up nicely at each feed. The incubator is no longer an expert, and the demand for poultry products suggests its more general use.

The "utility" bird is one that is not without its faults, but it is often from a good strain, hence has its own economic values.

One feeding rule is to give the hens half as much as they will eat of a morning, nothing at noon and a full meal at night.

FARM AND GARDEN

STUMP DESTROYER IS NOVEL

Solution of Problem of Clearing Land Appears to Be Solved by Washington Genius.

The problem of clearing away unsightly stumps appears to have been solved by a man in the state of Washington. Heretofore this has been done chiefly by blasting, but the apparatus shown in the illustration burns the stump down close to the ground. A vertical hole is drilled through the stump and two lateral holes, reaching to it. The reservoir is then wheeled up to it and two sets of tubes connected with the two side holes. Burning liquid fuel and air under pressure is injected through one hole and an inflammable liquid is injected through the other. When the two meet in the center hole the liquid is ignited and spreads through the entire stump, devouring it until it is eaten through down to the ground, leaving a level surface instead of the torn remains that follow dynamiting.

GIVING PLENTY OF DISTANCE

Common Mistake Made by Many Gardeners is That of Crowding Plants Too Close.

Many gardeners make the mistake of crowding garden vegetables too close in the drill. Vegetables require rapid growth and quick maturity to give quality and flavor to the plants when served. Unless the soil is exceptionally rich, and there is plenty of soil moisture available during the growing season, the plants are apt to be dwarfed and the quality of the vegetables impaired.

In producing vegetables for the market, the grower will endeavor to grow plants of high quality and desirable flavor, and he cannot afford to take any risk. It is far better to produce fewer products and gather vegetables of better quality than to have an abundance that do not command fair prices.

The safest plan is to sow plenty of seeds in order that a good stand may be secured. If the plants are tender and the spring is favorable for the insects, diseases, cold nights, etc., leave about twice as many plants as you desire to grow. When the weather is favorable for the growth of the plants, thin promptly, leaving the required number of plants. Be sure that the plants have sufficient distance to produce vegetables of extra quality.

DUMP SLED IS QUITE USEFUL

Can Conveniently Be Used for Hauling Manure During Both Summer and Winter Months.

(By J. G. GORDON.)

A dump cart for summer and a dumped sled for winter can be used very conveniently on the farm for hauling manure.

A box body may be adjusted to any sled. The pivots that swing the body should be located so as to make the top the heavier, and a pin should be run through the hind bench of the sled into the end of the body to hold it in an upright position while loading.

A Dump Sled.

As soon as a part of the load has been placed in the body this will hold it in position, then when ready to dump the load, pull out the pin and give the top of the body a push and the weight of the load will turn it over.

Barb Wire Marker.

The best device I have yet found for a "garden marker" is a piece of old barb wire which has been in use until the coil is well rolled or dragged, the ground is well marked by being pulled back and forth by a man at either end of the ground that is to be marked, says a writer in an exchange. This is quickly done, and does away with stakes, lines and unnecessary tramping back and forth over the ground.

DE LAVAL CREAM SEPARATOR

More Than 1,375,000 in Use

The Machine By Which All Others Are Judged

For more than thirty years the De Laval cream separator has been acknowledged as the World's Standard.

You may hear it said of some separator that "It's as good as a De Laval;" or if some competing salesman wants to make his argument particularly strong, he'll say "It's better than a De Laval."

The concern with a cheaply and poorly constructed machine says "Just as good as a De Laval and costs less."

But everywhere the De Laval is recognized by experienced creamerymen and dairymen and even by makers of would-be competing machines as the World's Standard.

The cream separator is more frequently used than any other machine on the farm, and for that reason, if for no other, only the very best should be purchased, and that's the De Laval.

PUTS BLAME ON PUBLISHERS TRUE COURTIERY IN GERMANY

Scholar Points Out How They Are Responsible for Literature in "Cold Storage."

Publishers complain that people do not buy serious books. An experienced scholar retorts that publishers will not let them. Here is a new and rather important historical work of six hundred pages. It is printed in large type on heavy paper, with wide margins, to make it as bulky as possible. The price is $5, "postage extra." This is considerable money; but there are some eight hundred public and college libraries that feel bound to buy any new historical work which can claim importance, no matter what the price.

The publisher would rather have the sure thing of eight hundred copies at $5 than take the chance of selling several thousand copies at $2. Theoretically, books in the library circulate; but it is notorious that people seldom go to a library for a new serious book. A reader whose habits or tastes would attract him to a new biography, say, wants the volumes on his shelves. "If it is really worth the trouble of reading he will almost certainly wish to refer to it again. He cannot trot down to the library for every reference. A reader of such habits or tastes wishes to possess the books in which he is really interested. If he cannot afford to own the book he probably will not read it at all. What circulates from the library, besides fiction, is Taine's English Literature, Macaulay's England, Gibbon's Decline and Fall, Boswell's Johnson.

It is clear consequently that a large part of our new serious literature is automatically canned and moved into cold storage, and so there is a world of pains and expense for nothing!—Saturday Evening Post.

TRY GIVING JOY TO OTHERS

Shedding of Sunshine Will Be Found to Have Good Effect on Those Who Practice It.

It was Mr. Barrie who quaintly said: "Women who bring sunshine into the life of others cannot keep it from themselves."

That is a recipe to learn and apply. If you will not try to be a spreader of joy for the joy it gives do so from selfish motives.

Girls may think this farfetched. Their one thought is to snatch at joy for themselves. It takes experience, perhaps bitter experience, to learn that the joy that counts most is the one with a rebound. Like a rubber ball, the harder you throw it the quicker it returns.

The girl who starts on a joy quest for herself cannot say: "I'll be nice to poor Maria, she has had such a stupid time," and then go about her sunshine shedding with patronizing airs. She may give joy, but the chances are that her patronage will be felt, and against the sunshine that counts glows in the heart and must come out.

One need not go into sunshine societies to bask in the rays of joy giving. Nor need that sunshine be for outsiders. Sunshine-shedding, like charity, can profitably begin at home. It is not so exciting, perhaps, to try to brighten the lives of mother or small brother or sister as it is to be a Lady Bountiful, but the reflex action is quite as strong.

Try shedding sunshine wherever you are. Do not let a day pass without doing some little thing to brighten that day for some one else, and you will find your day more joyful.

Value of a Chevalier.

A Parisian court has just decided as to the "value" of a chevalier of the Legion of Honor. Injured in the Avenue de l'Opera by an automobile, a former dealer in merchandise, decorated with the Legion of Honor, died in 1911, following the accident. His heirs brought suit for damages against the chauffeur and the owner of the auto. Maître Gondinet, the advocate of the owner of the auto, maintained that the ex-dealer in merchandise, old and without occupation, furnished no material to his heirs for damages. Maître Noguères, the advocate for the plaintiffs, said he had no difficulty in recognizing the damage, though unable to produce any document to establish it, and that Maître Gondinet for the defense was himself a member of the Legion of Honor and in default of any other evidence was an indication of value to the heirs. The court held with Maître Noguères and allowed 25,000 francs damages to the heirs of the former chevalier of the Legion of Honor.

"A Pig in a Poke."

A pig poker is a dealer in pigs—not the large and portly fellow whom you meet now and again at the country market with a card in his hand and more pigs of all ages, shapes and sizes for sale, but a little man, who for the most part carries his wares upon his back, or occasionally perhaps in a wheelbarrow. A "poke" of course is a pocket or sack, and a pig poker therefore is one who deals in pigs carried round from place to place in a poke. The old proverb about the foolishness of "buying a pig in a poke" has its origin of course in this time-honored method of pig purveying.—London Globe.

Little Incident Caused English Traveller to Express His Opinion of Yank Officer.

The German is not only been taught the other virtues, but he has been born with a kindness of heart and instinctive consideration for others which make the formalities of real value. The answer to have a fund of "small change" and valueless attentions from the same man who will go miles out of his way to do you a favor tomorrow.

Only a few months ago I was traveling in the same train with a young lieutenant, whose military and personal manners had more than once aroused suspicion in my English soul.

He was got up in his newest and finest uniform; he had on spotless white kid gloves, an everlast thrust in his eye; he looked, in fact, the very dandy who would not soil himself to save a life.

The train was very full, and presently an old peasant fellow came in with his basket of vegetables, and looked about helplessly, treading on everybody's toes in the meantime. I looked on my military neighbor and waited for the storm. The dandy arose, saluted gravely, offered the weary old peasant his seat, and went and stood outside.

If there is anything in thought telegraphy, that young officer must have heard me apologizing to him all the rest of our journey together.—"My German Year."

CARRIED FIRE FROM POWDER

Bravery and Presence of Mind of British Soldiers That Averted a Terrible Disaster.

On the taking of St. David's, in 1812, by the British army under Wellington, Captain William Jones of the 52nd regiment, having captured a French officer, employed his prisoner in pointing out quarters for his men. The Frenchman could not speak English, and Captain Jones—a fiery Welshman, whom it was the fashion in the regiment to term "Jack Jones"—knew no French; but dumb show supplied the want of language, and some of the company were lodged in a large store pointed out by the Frenchman, who then led the way to a church, near which Lord Wellington and his staff were standing. But no sooner had the guide stepped into the building than he started back, crying, "Sacred blue!" and ran out in the utmost alarm. The Welsh captain, however, went on, and perceived that the church had been used as a powder magazine by the French; barrels were standing round, samples of their contents scattered on the pavement, and in the midst was a fire, probably lighted by some Portuguese soldiers. Captain Jones and the sergeant entered the church, took up the burning embers brand by brand, bore them safely over the scattered powder, and out of the church, and thus averted the most terrific disaster.

Woodchuck's Name.

One of the most noticeable traits of woodchucks is the throwing up of large piles of dirt in front of their burrows. It is from this practice that the woodchuck got his name. In olden times—probably in the time of Aesop—the lower animals used to live in the happy country with a judge over them, the dog. One day a rabbit whose burrow adjoined that of a marmot complained to the latter that the rabbits' eyes were continually filled with the dirt which he threw out of his burrow. The marmot paid no heed to this remonstrance, and the rabbit was compelled to appeal to the judge. His honor immediately sent word to the offender that greater care must be taken in the future. But the insolent marmot, notorious for his inactivity and indifference, replied to the messenger that "would chuck" his dirt just where he pleased.

That settled it. The dog has been hunting for the gross offender ever since, and the name "woodchuck" has stuck to the whole tribe of marmots.—Brooklyn Standard Union.

First Encyclopedia.

The most ancient attempt at what is called in these days an "encyclopedia" was Pliny's "Natural History." This old work, a very high authority throughout the Middle Ages, is really a remarkable production and well deserves the fame that for so many ages belonged to it. Pliny, who died in 79 A. D., was not a naturalist, a physician or an artist, and did not pretend to be the wisest man of his time. Yet his work was his interest in knowledge that he devoted the leisure hours of a busy public life to compiling the work which did a vast amount of good in the world and paved the way for the comprehensive encyclopedias of the present time.

Enameling.

The process known as enameling is not of modern origin. On the contrary, it goes back to a venerable antiquity. If you will read up on the subject you will learn that excellent enamel is still preserved on some of the bricks that have been found among the ruins of old Babylon and Assyria, which have been placed back as far as the seventh or eighth century B. C. Beautiful glasses were made by the Egyptians as early as the third dynasty. The Greeks and Romans were acquainted with the art of enameling, as the museums of the world clearly show. It would pay you to visit such institutions in our own city.

BREEDING THE SHIRE HORSE

Character, Symmetry, Style, Constitution, Soundness and Type of Mare Are of Importance.

The first thing a farmer must try to get is a mare or two of just the right sort to begin with. The age to buy is not of so much importance; by buying fillies at one or two years old, they have the full length of their breeding life before them, but at the same time there is the risk of their proving non-breeders, or inferior breeders, while by buying a mare that has bred a foal or two successfully we discount the risk, but have to pay a higher price, and lose as much of her life as has passed. The mare that has begun to breed is the safest speculation.

In selecting the brood-mare the character, symmetry, style, constitution, soundness and type are of even greater importance than pedigree. It is well to have a type of perfection in one's eye and to get as near that as possible.

The head and eyes should betoken docility, intelligence and courage. It is only by close observation that any one can acquire the art of recognizing character in a mare. No amount of descriptive writing can teach one how to judge these characteristics in horse or man. The loin, of course, should be strong, and the tail well set up, in line with the back, not drooping. In a brood-mare a strong, healthy constitution is of the utmost importance.

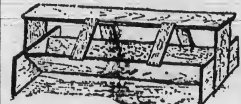

As for size, a mare standing 16 hands high, and built in proportion, is big enough. Color may be selected according to taste, but a bay or bay colored animal is always more salable than a black or any of the lighter colors.

When buying, every precaution should be taken to insure soundness—that is, absence of all hereditary disease, and a few dollars extra should not prevent a bargain being made if the mare approaches anywhere near the ideal above described.

Sanitary Hog Trough.

sole of Tullahoma, Tenn. It can be made any size desired, and of such lumber as may be handy. If ends are made long, it cannot be turned over. Looks to us like a good idea.

Raising Horses. Men who are raising scrub horses and using grade sires of any breed are very foolish. Plug horses and those which fit nowhere may sell low in the future, but horses that have a trade will sell high. Any sound saddle horse or any light harness horse or big draft horse or coach horse, any good chunk, any stylish Southern horse, any express horse and, we might say, any cavalry horse, will sell well, while the unclassified horse will grade at the tail end and sell for the plug that he is.

Cure for Stumbling. If a horse stumbles, give him his food on the floor, instead of in the manger. The position necessarily taken in feeding strengthens the muscles of the knees, and so removes the cause of the stumbling. A horse just brought from pasture does not stumble.

Pasture for Horses. Have plenty of pasture for the brood mares and colts. If the mares work during the week, let them graze on Sundays. Pasture is a cheap feed for all classes of stock, but don't pasture too closely.

A small institution like the Recorder cannot act in opposition to the will of so great a power as the United States Postal Department, no matter how unjust its rulings appear.

Several persons whose names were removed from the subscription list have sent the amount they owed on subscription and their names have been restored to the list.

The order from the Postoffice Department requiring the stricken from the subscription list because it is a year or more in arrears does not cancel a party's liability for the time he is in arrears and the person will not so construe it nor act as though he does if he wants to do the fair thing by the Recorder. He has pledged him to a point beyond which the postal authorities have said it should not go. Remit the amount you owe when your name was dropped and the Recorder will resume the weekly visits which Mr. Britt had discontinued.

BOUND TO EXERT INFLUENCE
Effects of the Passion of Sympathy, No Matter on What Object It is Lavished.
It is by the passion of sympathy that we enter into the concerns of others; that we are moved as they are moved, and are never suffered to be indifferent spectators of almost anything which men can do or suffer. For sympathy must be considered as a sort of substitution, by which we are put into the place of another man, and affected in a good measure as he is affected; so that this passion may either partake of the nature of those which regard self-preservation, and turning upon pain may be a source of the sublime; it may turn upon ideas of pleasure, and then, whatever has been said of the social affections, whether they regard society in general, or only some particular modes of it, may be applicable here.

It is by this principle chiefly that poetry, painting and other affecting arts transmute their passion from one breast to another, and are often capable of gratifying a delight on wretchedness, misery and death itself. It is a common observation that objects in art, in tragedy and such representations, the source of a very high species of pleasure. This, taken as a fact, has been the cause of much reasoning. This satisfaction has been commonly attributed, first, to the comfort we receive in considering that so melancholy a story is no more than a fiction; and next, the contemplation of our own freedom from evils we see represented. I am afraid it is a practice much too common, in inquiries of this nature, to attribute the cause of feelings which merely arise from the mechanical structure of our bodies, or from the natural force or constitution of our minds, to certain conclusions of the reasoning faculty on the objects presented to us. For I have some reason to apprehend that the influence of reason in producing our passions is nothing near so extensive as is commonly believed.—Edmund Burke.

ALTITUDES IN UNITED STATES
Differences Between East and West Are Remarkable in Their "Wide Variety."

The differences between the eastern and western elevations in this country are curiously striking. Colorado has 40 peaks that are more than 14,000 feet above sea level. Mount Washington, in New Hampshire, and Mount Mitchell, in North Carolina, the highest peaks in the Appalachian system north and south, respectively, are considerably less than half as high as this above the ocean.

Several transcontinental railway lines in the west pull their main line trains over greater elevations than that reached by the cog railroad up New Hampshire's above-mentioned mountain. These western elevations are, of course, reached gradually.

Most large cities lie low. Chicago is only about 600 feet above sea level, and Pittsburgh but 100 feet higher. Philadelphia ranges from sea level to a height in its suburbs of some 300 feet. Minneapolis, near the head of the Mississippi, is at an elevation of less than 1,000 feet, and various parts of New Orleans at the mouth of the great river are recorded in the government tables as having elevations of from one to fifty feet. St. Louis lies about half way between these terminal cities.

Montana is away up, with its leading city perched at the elevation of the highest peaks of the Adirondack mountains. In Denver there is a mark, near the State Capitol, which is just one mile above the sea level.

CHANCES FOR THE STUDENT
No Reason Why Their Opportunities Should Not Be Extended in Many Directions.

We have student mechanics in all the large factories and student miners in all the great mines. There are student trappers on all the trains and student superintendents in all the offices.

Soon we shall have student senators in the senate and student representatives in the house. A student judge will sit on every bench and student attorneys will assist every lawyer.

Student social learners will attend every function and student soldiers will accompany the troops. The White House will have to be enlarged to make room for about 1,000,000 student presidents, for nearly every mother in the United States will want to send her son to the White House to learn how to be president.

Student brides and student grooms will attend every wedding ceremony and student ministers will accompany the minister on his parochial calls.

It might be interesting to know just what a student lover's privilege would be, but there is no doubt that a few lessons are sadly needed by some young persons.

Student poets would with advantage learn the gentle art of standing out of the landlady and student bill collectors would find it advantageous to learn how best to land at the bottom of the stairs.—Chicago News.

Neatly Evaded Apology.
One day, Beckmann, the comic actor, was induced to take off a well-known newspaper editor, Frankel by name, in one of the characters he was representing. He performed admirably, but he was so clever that he evaded his task so cleverly that he closed the audience broke out into loud calls for Frankel. The journalist brought an action, and Beckmann was condemned to go to the house of the insulted party and there beg his pardon in the presence of witnesses. At the hour appointed Frankel sat in the circle of his family, together with a number of relatives and friends whom he had convened for the occasion, waiting the arrival of the delinquent. He tarried long, and half an hour had passed in weary suspense, when, at last, he opened, and Beckmann put his head in and asked: "Does Mr. Melr live here?" "Oh, no," answered Frankel, "he lives next door." "Ah, then I beg your pardon," said the actor, and hastily withdrew, having thus acquitted himself of the imposed penance to the great annoyance of Frankel and the intense amusement of the assembled witnesses.

Borrowing Books.
The practice of borrowing books is essentially an evil one in those who can afford to own books and public libraries serve to encourage and foster the evil, though they are of very great value to the poor student. We think that, upon general principles, people should own the books they read. We believe that libraries in buying books, reading books and keeping books. As a reference a public library serves an admirable purpose, and in many instances it is of undoubted advantage to the people. But one that would be surely profited by books should own them if he can, and should have them for companions continually around him.—Eugene Field.

We are sorry to report the death of Granville Baker at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Klopp, Monday morning. Appendicitis was the cause of his death.

Another flower has been plucked from the garden of our little world and transplanted to the paradise of our Lord to bloom eternally. Wallace McWehly died at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Steve McWehly, July 17, 1912, after a lingering illness of tuberculosis of the throat.

He was born in April, 1888, and died when the sun of his life was just reaching its zenith. Although he was not a member of any church he learned to love and trust his Master before the end came. Near midnight, standing in the room, he said, "I am going home," and with that the little barque of his life parted from this world and sailed for the river of death. Wallace was raised in this community and had a host of friends, who with his many relatives, will deeply feel his loss. About one year and a half ago he gave up his position in Memphis, Tenn., and came home, hoping to regain his health, but failing to do so, he died. He was a good man, but all in vain. He returned home this spring, his voice entirely gone and suffered in silence until he died. Some from the Master, last Wednesday evening called him home. His parents and brothers are heart broken, but it is so. He was a young man, before the hand of time had bowed the body or the springs of life dried up. After a short stay at home, Mr. Bradley the remains were laid to rest Friday afternoon in the cemetery below town, beneath a covering of beautiful flowers, there to await the general resurrection. The community in general extend heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved relatives, yet we realize that our efforts to comfort are of little avail in this hour of supreme sorrow and we would direct them to Him, the great comforter, their acknowledged friend and Saviour.

She was a devoted and kind-hearted woman, a consistent member until called to her reward. In her death the children lose an affectionate and indulgent parent and the community a devoted, genial friend.

Funeral services were conducted at Hopeful, Sunday, July 22, by Rev. Wagner, of Cincinnati. Part of the country has been with frequent showatives in and near Burlington, from Saturday noon until Monday at noon. Mr. Cowen is a son of the late Joseph Cowen and a grandson of the late Samuel Cowen, who for many years was Jailer of the county. Mr. Cowen left Burlington nearly a quarter of a century ago, quite a small boy, this being his first visit back to the scenes of his boyhood. Many changes have taken place in that time—most all the older people having passed to their reward, and new ones moved in. His relatives, and what few acquaintances are still here, failed to recognize him, and he had to inform each one he met who he was. Mr. Cowen is a man of pleasing address, and holds a good position with the Cincinnati Street Railway Company, that of car inspector. He and his wife left Monday for Hinton, Ky., to visit his wife's people.

That Allan Black, of Big Bone, who is pitching the Richmond club in the Blue Grass League, is making good, there is no doubt, will be seen by the following dispatch to Sunday's Equivir, in a game between Richmond and Frankfort, last Saturday afternoon:

"Black and Cramer, considered two of the best in the league, were the opposing slalom here this afternoon. Black won 2 to 1. Nicholson's slow punt down the third-base line was the near-est to a bit the visitors were able to secure off Black's delivery. Only four balls were hit out of the infield by Frankfort."

War broke out among the congregation at the colored church, last Sunday afternoon, and a lively war of chin-music resulted in one of the sisters being given the knock-out blow twice in succession by one of the deacons of the church. The principal combatants were one Dave Sanders and Julia Riddell. Others were being drawn into the scrap, and had it not been for the interference of some of the white men, there likely would have been a "black burying" in town the first of the week. A warrant charging Sanders with assault and battery, was issued Monday morning and his trial set for Friday morning at 9 o'clock.

SENATE HITS TAFT

PRESIDENT REBUKED WHEN BAILEY RESOLUTION IS ADOPTED
BY 35 TO 23.

TEXAN CLASHES WITH BORAH

Southern Senator Bitterly Assails
Chief Executive—Attacks Colonel Roosevelt in His Extended Speech—
Says Taft Slandered Him.

Washington, July 13.—The senate by a vote of 35 to 23 adopted a modification of Senator Bailey's resolution declaring any attempt on the part of a president to influence the vote of any senator upon any question a violation of the spirit of the Constitution, after a discussion which lasted nearly the entire day Tuesday.

The resolution was prompted by President Taft's interference in the Lorimer case as shown by his letter to Theodore Roosevelt last January and revealed in a speech he made in Boston last April.

Senator Bailey made this letter the basis of a scathing denunciation of the president for interfering with the constitutional rights of the senate and characterized the president's reference to him as a "false and infamous slander."

Senator Borah defended the president as did Senator Smith of Michigan and several others.

When Senator Bailey arose to speak to his resolution instantly the senate scene began to fill. He was fairly started when Senator William E. Borah of Idaho challenged his allegations that President Taft had not been able to read the evidence before he wrote the famous letter of January 6, 1911, to Roosevelt. Senator Borah was mentioned in the letter as the president's adviser.

Bailey insisted and sustained his point that the president had not read all the evidence. Lorimer in his speech made the same charge based on the fact that the report did not reach the document room until the day after the letter was written.

"I want to show just how officious and meddlesome the president was in this matter," Bailey declared, as he had the clerk read the letter.

"He hardly uses that term now. I guess," commented Bailey, evoking a titter as the salutation, "My Dear Taft," was read.

He took up the letter and analyzed it.

"In God's name, has the senate of the United States reached such unspeakable degradation," he cried, "that the president must summon senators to the White House to urge them to do their duty under their oath of office?" at the part where President Taft said he had "summoned senators to the White House to urge them to be honest." "He sowed the seeds here which culminated in Chicago in 'splitting a great party,'" he said. "The president may find it necessary to give out the other letters to which he refers as the campaign progresses and the former president asks them."

"He has just as much right to summon a member of the Supreme court and tell him how to decide a lawsuit as he has to summon a senator and tell him how to decide the future of another senator. He has more right, for the judges are creatures of his hand."

"When the president of the United States declared I intended to keep the senator from Illinois in his seat regardless of the law and the evidence, he penned a false and malicious slander against me," said Bailey.

Even if the president had a right to use his power to influence the vote, Senator Bailey charged he acted erroneously because in the letter of January 6, 1911, Mr. Taft wrote he had only read "such of the evidence as he could get at."

"Is it fair to try a man on his good name—of what is dearer than his name—on such evidence as I could get at?" demanded Senator Bailey.

The Texas senator suggested that he had been singled out because Colonel Roosevelt entertained an "ancient prejudice" against him.

"I once proved that he slandered me," added Senator Bailey, "and when I denounced him, as I now intend to denounce the present president, the country held up its hands in horror. Nons held them higher than the present president, but I have lived long enough to see him ransack the records of the war department to convict Colonel Roosevelt of a falsehood and he seems to have succeeded. When the president penned that infamous slander of me in this letter no one knew it better than the president of the United States himself."

FLOOD HITS DENVER

WATER SWEEPING DOWN CREEK
AFTER CLOUDBURST DEVASTATES PART OF CITY.

TWO DEAD, FIFTEEN INJURED

Hundreds of Men, Women and Children Are Sheltered in City Auditorium—Telephone Alarm Saves Many From Frigid Death.

Denver, Colo., July 17.—As the result of a cloudburst which poured down the shallow bed of Cherry creek, through this city, into the South Platte river Sunday night, two are dead, 15 injured, 1,000 men, women and children homeless and $2,500,000 worth of property is in ruins.

Frank Hill and Mrs. Lydia Rickford are known to be dead. Zoe Wallace and Albert Gray are missing, as are several others.

The big city auditorium is a refuge camp commanded by Fire Commissioner McGraw and Chief of Police O'Neil. Hundreds of the homeless men, women and children gathered there are fed by the city. Twenty-five babies from six months to six years old, whose parents are believed to have been lost, are in the care of the police matron.

After directing relief and rescue work, Mayor Arnold organized relief parties to begin the search of the debris of the flood, which is a trail of wrecked dwellings, debris from which is heaped in the sluggish current of the South Platte.

The chamber of commerce has opened a relief subscription. The flood is without parallel in the history of the city.

Reports along the course of Cherry creek indicate an augmentation of the loss of property in the outlying districts.

Had it not been for a note of warning sounded over the telephone to the city hall just before the crest of the flood reached the city many could not have escaped death.

MITCHELL WAIVES HIS RIGHT

Labor Leader Will Not Be Present in Court When Sentence Is

Washington, July 16.—John Mitchell, vice-president of the American Federation of Labor, found guilty a second time in the district supreme court, with President Gompers and Secretary Morrison of the federation, of contempt of court, has waived his right to be present when sentence is passed in his case tomorrow.

Mr. Mitchell is at present engaged in a lecture tour in the west. Justice Wright was about to order a warrant to secure Mitchell's appearance when his attorney received a statement from Mitchell waiving his right to be in court when the sentence is passed.

YANKEES SCORE TWICE

ANNEX TWO EVENTS IN CLOSING
DAY OF OLYMPIAD.

Win 1,600-Meter Run and Decathlon—
Portuguese Sprinter in Marathon
Dies From Sunstroke.

Stockholm, July 16.—In two of the leading events of the closing day of the Olympic games, namely, the 1,600-meter relay race and the Decathlon on Monday, the United States secured first place, while in the 800-meter swimming final, which was carried off by Australia, the United States was second, thus securing altogether eight points.

The standing of the teams on points is now:
United States, 122 Norway, 10
Sweden, 100 Australia, 13
Great Britain, 68 Italy, 8
Finland, 39 Hungary, 8
Germany, 31 Greece, 4
France, 21 Russia, 3
South Africa, 16 Belgium, 3
Canada, 13 Austria, 3
Denmark, 11 Holland, 2

James Thorpe of the Carlisle Indian school performed a remarkable feat in winning the Decathlon and proved his general all-round ability as an athlete.

Cleopas was cast over the spectators and participants in the games when it became known that the only Portuguese runner in Sunday's historic Marathon race, F. Lazaro, had died in the hospital. He suffered from stroke during the race and fell out after running nineteen miles.

The news caused great distress to the king, the crown prince and other members of the royal family. The Bohemian runner, F. Slavik, is also in the hospital, but his condition is not considered serious.

Force Killed Him.

New York, July 18.—Herman Rosenthal, proprietor of a gambling house, who was to have testified to District Attorney Whitman a story told a few days ago, charging certain police officials with grafting and oppression, is dead in a morgue here with five bullets in his head.

While the police are holding a man who says his name is Louis Bibby, as the driver of the automobile from which five men shot Rosenthal to death, the latter's widow gave the assassination squarely up to the police.

The eye-witnesses of the shooting declare that at least one policeman was in the automobile when the shots were fired.

The widow charges that her husband was murdered to keep him from getting his story of extortion before the grand jury, where District Attorney Whitman was to have taken him during the day.

The young man produced a small square box for his pocket.

They Are Overworked Now
Four-year-old Dick had made an important discovery that his half would pull out if enough force was exerted, and was absorbed in proving the fascinating fact on his forehead. His elder—aged seven—noticed the proceeding with round-eyed horror.

"Why?" demanded Dickie, with the cynicism of childhood.
"Because," Dickie says that all your hairs are numbered—and if you pull any out you'll make a lot of extra bookkeeping for the angels."

JUST CAUSE FOR PRIDE

Often Caused by Tea and Coffee Drinking.

How many persons realize that tea and coffee so disturb digestion that they produce a muddy, yellow complexion?

A ten days' trial of Postum has proven a means, in thousands of cases, of clearing up a bad complexion.

A Washa, young lady tells her experience:
"All of us—father, mother, sister and brother—had used tea and coffee for many years until finally we all had stomach troubles, more or less."

"We all were cowed and troubled with pimples, bad breath, disagreeable taste in the mouth, and all of us simply so many bundles of nerves."

"We didn't realize that tea and coffee caused the trouble until one day we ran out of coffee and went to borrow some from a neighbor. She gave us some Postum and told us to try that."

"Although we started to make it, we all felt sure that we would be sick if we missed our strong coffee, but we tried Postum and were surprised to find it delicious."

"We read the statements on the pkg., got more and in a month and a half you wouldn't have known us. We all were able to digest our food without any trouble, each one's skin became clear, tongues cleared off, and nerves in fine condition. We never use anything now but Postum. There is nothing like it." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkg.

WOMAN RIGHT TO VOTE

FOR NOMINEE FOR SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENT IN DOUBT.

Question Submitted to Attorney General Garnett, Who is Preparing an Opinion on Subject.

Frankfort, Ky.—Attorney General Garnett is preparing an opinion which will give a construction of the woman's suffrage law passed at the last session of the legislature. The main bone of contention is "can women vote for the nominee for school superintendent, and if so, can they vote in the primary to make the nominee?" It will not come as a surprise if Judge Garnett decides that it is up to the election officers to make the decision who will have the right to vote in the primary and for the candidates. The woman unquestionably have the right to vote for school trustees. This right is not disputed, even by the bitterest enemies of woman's suffrage.

Trophies Are Shown.

Col. J. Tandy Ellis, Acting Adjutant General, is exhibiting in his office the silver trophies for marksmanship offered the Kentucky National Guard by a powder company. There are two of them, exactly alike, excepting that one is inscribed "first" and the other "second honor, Kentucky National Defense Trophy."

The trophies stand over two feet high and are of massive silver, surmounted by the shield of the United States with crossed guns. In the center is a heavy bronze medallion. They are said to have cost $220 each.

The military companies will compete for them on the rifle range. Companies in which every man shoots are qualified, and the company securing the highest average score is allowed possession of the first honor trophy for the succeeding year. The second honor trophy goes to the company having the next highest score. All the companies are now working for the honors, which will be awarded December 31. The trophies are around the bronze medallions are to be inscribed with the names of the companies and their regiments, holding them, with the years in which they won.

Rules on Hunters' License.

Hunters' license are $1 a year under the new fish and game commission law, out of which county court clerks are allowed 15 cents a license and no more. This opinion was given the Fish and Game Commission by Attorney General Garnett. Licenses issued this year will expire January 1, 1913.

Agent A. C. Ward, of the commission, has received replies from a number of rod and gun clubs in the state offering to co-operate with the commission in the furtherance of its work by suggesting proper persons for wardens. Active efforts are under way to organize a club in every county. The commission will hold a meeting soon when special officers will be appointed to go over the state and study local conditions.

L. & N. Objects to Assessment.

Representatives of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. concluded their presentation of testimony and exhibits before the State Board of Valuation and Assessment, and next week the board will hear arguments in favor of the reduction of the tentative assessment. The presentation of testimony has occupied two days. The railroad officials contend that duplication of assets and contingent holdings, amounting to millions, have been included in the assets. Attorney General Garnett was called into the hearing by the state board to advise the state officials in getting at the facts in controversy.

Boone Holds the Record.

Boone county holds the unique record of not having cost the state a cent for witness fees in a felony case in three years. The jailer of that county has drawn $140 in the last year, $60 of which was for fuel and attendance on the court, and $47 for transportation to the penitentiary of one prisoner, who must have pleaded guilty, as there were no witness fees. E. W. Gaines, claim clerk in the State Auditor's office, who lives at Burlington, declared it is because the county is free from lawlessness, and not through and laxity in the law's enforcement.

Gov. McCreary Returns to Frankfort Saturday.

Fear Damage to Wheat in Shock.

Some of the farmers in the county have already threshed their wheat, but the majority of the wheat growers still have their wheat in shock, and it is feared it will be considerably damaged by the continued rains that have been falling during the last two weeks. Fortunately, the rains have not been general in the county, and while some parts have had heavy rains one day, they have had it hot and dry there for the next two days, in some cases, thus giving some of the farmers a chance to thresh their wheat. In some parts of the county, however, it is feared that the rains will cause the wheat to sprout in the field. Very little of the oats crop has been cut and the rains have been interfering with it to some extent, though so far not much damage has been done. If the rains continue for another week, it is expected that rust may damage the oats.

Innovation at Workhouse.

The Frankfort workhouse is the only institution of the kind in the county that has a phonograph weighing machine. It will be used to weigh each prisoner when he enters the workhouse and when he leaves.

The talking weighing machine was formerly operated on the street by a drugstore, but it got out of fix and Emil Haldi, the keeper of the workhouse, accepted it as a gift from the proprietor of the store. It will now speak out and tell each prisoner how much he has gained by living on the wholesome fare that Mr. Haldi provides for the prisoners.

For New Libraries.

At the next meeting of the State Prison commission she probably will advise with the members in regard to institutional libraries in the prisons and reform school.

Work on the annex to the old Capitol is nearing completion and it probably will be ready for occupancy by August 1. The Fish and Game commission, the Good Roads commission and the Geological survey will be the first occupants. When it is in readiness the Capitol commission will inspect it and decide what other departments will be removed to it from the new Capitol. The Railroad and Prison commissions and the Board of Control may be transferred if there is room.

After a year of research and experiment, all nature has been made to reveal the secret that has been hidden for so long. OVERHEARD STOCK

More Attention In Boone County

Executive Organization of An Association Made at Waterloo Last Thursday.

Pursuant to a call issued by the Boone County Board of Schools, in conjunction with some of the progressive farmers and stock breeders of the county, an all day meeting was held in the Grove, near Waterloo, Thursday, July 25th. Some four or five hundred people were present, representative farmers for the most part with their families. The attention given by the entire gathering to the speeches made from the platform was superior to any the writer has ever seen in an out-door meeting. This was an indication of the interest felt by the farmers in questions that pertain to their interests and that of the community.

The bountiful dinner served from a long table in the woods in no wise detracted from the interest of the occasion, nor from the reputation which Boone county has of having the most bountiful providers and the best cooks in the world.

The subjects discussed were all of interest to those present. Mr. Don Williamson acted as master of ceremonies, introducing the Rev. Geo. Smith as the first speaker. Mr. Smith sounded the keynote of co-operation among farmers in various ways as the solution of his problems. T. Z. Roberts gave a pertinent talk on the use and care of the telephone system. Later in the day at his suggestion a meeting was held at the Boone County Hotel, where those especially interested in telephones. The Rev. Mrs. Jones made a very pleasing impression on the people in a talk on "Health on the Farm."

The first speaker after dinner was Dr. A. G. G. Richardson, of the Ohio State University on "The Care of Livestock." The kinds of colic with their treatment were discussed. Tuberculosis, the relation between that of human and animals was treated in a scholarly and interesting manner. Dr. Richardson's speech was highly appreciated. Supt. Edgar C. Riley made a stirring speech on "Boone County's Needs." He pointed out the many lines in which our efforts for improvement might be used and urged that all should be active in forwarding the best interest of the community. Prof. Everett L. Dix spoke on "Co-operation among Farmers." He urged the union of all forces that make for good.

Rev. H. H. Hendley discussed the subject of "Education" in a comprehensive way pointing out the fact that the education of the child begins in the home and the parent should not shift his own responsibility placing it too much on the teacher. After the program was concluded a special meeting was held of those especially interested in thoroughbred stock. A committee consisting of W. G. Kite, J. M. Craven and Edgar C. Riley was selected to perfect plans for an organization. The clerical work of the association will be carried on in connection with the Superintendent's office and the County High School at Burlington. All who may be interested in this organization should communicate with any member of this committee. If you wish to become a member write the Superintendent Edgar C. Riley, Burlington. Such an association will be a great thing in advancing and improving the live stock of the county. It will be the means of furnishing a market for those who have thoroughbreds for sale. Horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, chickens are all included.

W. G. Kite in whose grove the Thursday meeting was held was active in promoting this initial meeting and the thanks of all who are interested are due him for his efforts.

Tobacco Money Coming.

Frankfort, Ky., July 26.—A meeting of some two hundred tobacco growers who were in the pool of 1909 were addressed this afternoon at the Court House by A. L. Ferguson, of Georgetown, Vice-president of the Burley Society. The meeting had been called by the growers of this county for the purpose of taking some steps to force the Burley Society to settle with them unless a satisfactory reason for the long delay could be made. Mr. Ferguson talked and answered questions for two hours and the growers decided to take no steps, but to await the promised settlement which Mr. Ferguson said would be made in about two weeks.

He told the growers that about 15 per cent more of the appraised value of the 1909 pool would be paid in two weeks, which would still leave some little to be distributed later; that the 19 per cent of the money provided for in the pooling contract, which was to be invested in the Burley company, had been invested and was already earning a good dividend; that the ten per cent not so held out amounted to about one million dollars. He told the growers that there was still in the treasury of the pool and 1907 pools about $300,000 and that the pool of 1908 had been held up because of suits filed against the poolers of three years ago.

That will be the end of each, and the more money there is, the more the poolers will be able to pay.

TO SCHOOLS

Public Drinking Cup Law Does Not Apply.

Frankfort.—Another hole has been found in the Kentucky drinking cup law, passed by the last General Assembly. In response to an inquiry from the Boone County Board of Education Attorney General Garnett, in an opinion rendered one day last week, held that the law does not apply to public schools in Kentucky. The reason assigned is similar to that in the opinion given the Board of County Commissioners. It was held that the law does not apply to the State hospitals, because they are not "publicly frequented places" within the meaning of the statute. The law specifically designated certain places, such as hotels, boarding houses, railroad trains and stations, and then included generally all other "publicly frequented places." This construed and to a certain extent defined by specific application of the law is held to be limited in its operation to places where the general public has a right to and does frequently congregate.

It is pointed out that by local ordinances and police regulations or by rule of the boards of education the ban can be placed on the public drinking cup in school-houses, but that the State law does not reach them.

Colored Schools.

Since a recent decision of the Court of Appeals, the Department of Education at Frankfort has sent copies of the following instructions to Superintendents in regard to colored schools: "The following rules should now be observed as to these schools:

"They should be included in one of your educational divisions. "They should elect a colored visitor on the first Saturday in August. "Teachers should be elected by the Division Board of Education. "The County Board of Education should collect taxes from the taxpayers and should build houses and pay all the expenses of the school. "Teachers' salaries will be subject to the salary schedule of the county. "The railroad tax due the colored pupils should be paid to the County Board of Education. "Such colored schools will in every respect be under the control of the County Board of Education as all other white and colored schools of the county."

Women and the Schools.

A large number of school trustees will be elected in Kentucky on Saturday, August 3. Contrary to the practice heretofore, the voting will not be confined to males. The law granting school suffrage to Kentucky women became effective in June and women who are able to read and write and who are over 21 years of age will participate in the elections if they so desire. In the rural districts and in the smaller cities women are eligible to the office of school trustee, and it is probable that a considerable number of female trustees will be elected. In the country districts any woman who is over 21 years of age and has been a resident of the district for sixty days is eligible to the office of trustee, provided she is able to read and write.

Two bodies were found floating in the river here Monday. One was that of a young colored man and was found in the shallow water near the Kentucky shore. There were no means of identifying the body, and it was buried in the river bank above a high water mark, in accordance with the Kentucky state law. The other body was found on this side near the wharf. It was the corpse of a white man apparently about middle age, and showed signs of having been in the water but a short time. It was taken to Fitch's undertaking establishment to await identification.

We hear it reported that the engineering department of the Queen & Crescent railroad has completed all preliminary work for the beginning of a double track between Erlanger and Williamstown. Grading will be started in a few days. It is expected that the work will be completed by September 1st. This will give the road about 30 miles of continuous double track from Ludlow to Williamstown.

The pipes, boilers and radiators have been delivered at the County Infirmary and will be installed as soon as the ceiling has been completed. This will be a great improvement at the infirmary as the building can be kept warm and the inmates comfortable during the cold weather, which was next to impossible during the past, besides there will not be so many fires to look after and less danger of fire. The Fiscal Court is to be commended for the improvements at the court house and infirmary.

The rains this year seem to come in spots. In Burlington and immediate vicinity there have been frequent downpours, but just a few miles south and west of town but very little has fallen in the past month until last week, when these sections were visited by a good rain. In traveling over the county this tendency is very noticeable. In some sections fields seem to be soaked while in others crops of all kinds show the effects of the drought. The one crop that seems to be good every where is the oats, while tobacco is late the crop is growing nicely and if not injured by an early frost will make a fair crop.

We clip the following item of news from the Milton News: "Representative and Mrs. Arthur House will return to Kentucky in a few days. The time has about rolled around for the county fairs and Mr. House just can't stay away. From early boyhood Mr. House has been an enthusiast on the county fair and he has helped put a great many of them on their feet financially. His reputation along this line resulted in an invitation not long ago to address a gathering in Maryland on 'How to Successfully Conduct a County Fair.' He accepted and made a big hit. Now that he is active in politics, our Representative will combine business and pleasure. While shaking hands with all the men and women and kissing the babies, that he might not be forgotten next November, he will at the same time recall his boyhood days while enjoying the attraction of the fairs."

That Dr. Peddicord is some gardener is evidenced—by the fact that for the past three or four weeks he has been supplying his tables with all the splendid vegetables that ripen under Dixie's sun, and of a size that has already spread the owner's fame, and of a quality that would do honor to the garden of King. The doctor is one of those who believe in the old adage, "It's the early bird that gets the worm," and of mornings long before dawn he is seen in the Eastern horizon, he is in his garden beating clove to the line of "Little Red," and whistling "Under the shade of the Old Apple Tree." Besides his fine vegetables, he has a row of sweet peas, which with all the variegated colors of the rainbow commingled with their fragrance send their sweetness to the winds from the four corners of the earth.

60 MEN MURDERED

MEXICAN REBELS BLOW PASSENGER TRAIN FROM TRACK AND KILL VICTIMS.

BOMB PLACED ON RAILS

After Sacking Express and Baggage Cars Zapatistas Pour Oil on Coaches and Set Them Afire—Bodies Are Cremated.

Mexico City, July 23.—In an attack by Zapatistas Sunday on a passenger train between this city and Cuernavaca, Morelos, more than sixty persons were killed and many wounded.

The Zapatistas, who are said to have numbered 500, placed a mine under the railroad track, which exploded as the locomotive passed over it. The overturned engine hardly had settled when the Zapatistas sprang up from all sides and poured a murderous fire into the train.

First the subject of their attack was a second-class coach in which were riding a federal military escort with a captain and two lieutenants. The federal got out of the car as quickly as possible and answered the fire of the assailants, but their efforts were futile. All of the command, with the exception of five who were wounded and two who escaped, were killed.

Thirty passengers in the second-class coaches were killed and many wounded. The conductor, an American named Allen, is not expected to live. After the train had been swept by their fire and few of the passengers or crew not killed or wounded, the Zapatistas rushed on their stricken victims and began killing the wounded.

After sacking the express and baggage cars, the rebels poured oil on the cars and, putting the bodies of the dead on them, set fire to the train. When the relief train arrived there was nothing but debris and a few persons, most of whom were hurt, to tell the tale.

GOVERNOR DENEEN FOR TAFT

Illinois State Republican Nominee Will Stay by Party—New Ticket Is Promised.

Chicago, July 24.—Gov. Charles S. Deneen and the other nominees on the Republican state ticket told the Progressive party committee of five Monday they were first of all Republicans; that they expected to support the Republican national ticket, and that they would not endorse Theodore Roosevelt and his new party.

When this information was conveyed at noon to Senator Joseph M. Dixon, manager of the Roosevelt campaign at the Congress hotel, he said it could mean but one thing—the nomination of another state ticket composed of men who were identified with the new political party.

None of the Republican state nominees left the committee of five long in doubt. The Progressives—Medill McCormick and Chauncey Dewey of Chicago, J. T. Williams of Sterling, B. F. Harris of Champaign and F. G. Allen of Moline—went into conference with the governor at the statehouse in Springfield and in two hours had received the answer of all the nominees.

Senator Dixon professed surprise that there should be any question raised regarding a third ticket in this state.

WILL ACCEPT SCHEME

BEEF TRUST'S PLAN TO DISSOLVE IS SATISFACTORY.

Department of Justice Will Drop the Prosecution Following Conclusion of Agreement.

Washington, July 23.—The voluntary dissolution plan of the National Packing company has been approved by the department of justice and all prosecution of the packers now pending will probably be dropped.

This much was practically admitted by Attorney General Wickersham on his return from New York, where he has been for several days.

"I know nothing of the plan of dissolution other than what I have read in the newspapers," said the attorney general. "It looks as if the packers had at last decided to throw up the sponge and surrender."

The newspaper articles which Attorney General Wickersham read included the statement issued by United States District Attorney Wilkerson of Chicago and the outline of the plan was official. It is understood that the only thing which can prevent an agreement between the department and the packers is for the complete plan of dissolution to be submitted in a day or two, to differ from the outline already presented.

JUDGE HANFORD OUT

FEDERAL JURIST AT SEATTLE QUITS AS HOUSE COMMITTEE IS INVESTIGATING.

ILL HEALTH IS REASON GIVEN

He Telegraphs Resignation to President While Last Witnessess Wait to Testify in Impeachment Proceedings—President to Await Letter.

Seattle, Wash., July 24.—United States district court Judge Cornelius H. Hanford, whose conduct on the bench has been under investigation for nearly a month by a subcommittee of the house judiciary committee, telegraphed on Monday last his resignation to President Taft.

The impeachment proceedings against the judge were the direct result of a decision rendered by him last spring declaring forfeited the naturalization papers of a resident of this city named Olson because of his Socialist views. Hanford based his action on the ground that Olson had deceived the court and that his radical opinions constituted a menace to the institutions of the country.

The impeachment resolution was introduced in the house by Representative Victor Berger of Milwaukee and on its adoption a subcommittee headed by James M. Graham of Illinois was appointed to conduct an investigation in this city.

When the committee met here Monday it was believed the last oral testimony would be presented before night and the committee men be ready to begin consideration of the mass of documentary evidence already in the record.

While the range of subjects to be considered was not known, it was thought probable the trial of Charles F. Munday and those of the other Alaska coal land operators would be investigated.

To a question put by a reporter as to whether the resignation of the committee would relieve the committee from further duty, the chairman declined to answer.

Washington, July 24.—President Taft will take no action in connection with Hanford's resignation until he has received a letter which the judge has written him. The president made this statement:

"Judge Hanford has telegraphed me that he has written me a letter," said the president, "and I shall do nothing until I have received it."

DENIES TRUST AID

FORMER SENATOR SCOTT SAYS CORPORATIONS DIDN'T HELP.

Perkins' Gift Was Personal—Former Legislator's Own $30,000 Was the Biggest Contribution.

Washington, July 24.—No contributions were made by corporations, Henry H. Havemeyer of the International Harvester company to the campaign of Colonel Roosevelt, according to the testimony of former Senator Nathan B. Scott of West Virginia on Monday before the committee investigating campaign contributions of 1904 and 1908.

Mr. Scott testified that the largest contribution made to the national committee in that campaign of which he had knowledge was his own, amounting to $30,000 or $40,000.

George W. Perkins, he said, had given $15,000, but not to the national committee. Both contributions were used in the West Virginia state campaign.

Mr. Scott said none of the "harvester people" had contributed to the 1904 campaign.

"How about the Perkins contribution?" asked Senator Clay.

"Well, I understood that Mr. Perkins' contribution was a personal matter of his own," said Mr. Scott, "because of the personal relations that existed between him and President Roosevelt."

Washington, July 30.—When Alton B. Parker ran for president in 1904, the Democratic campaign fund contained about $1,000,000, said W. F. Sheehan of New York, who testified Thursday before the senate committee investigating campaign funds.

Mr. Sheehan was then chairman of the Democratic national executive committee. Money was sent by the committee, he said, to Maine, Colorado and Nebraska.

The witness declared the committee made a rule at the beginning of the campaign to accept no money from any trust.

LOSES SEAT IN CONGRESS

Representative Gatlin of Missouri Is Ousted From House, But Wins Bridge Game Day.

Washington, July 22.—While the society columns of Washington newspapers were announcing Friday the engagement of Representative Theron E. Gatlin of Missouri to Miss Laura A. Catlin, daughter of former Gov. William R. Merriam of Minnesota, a house elections committee No. 2 was reporting that Representative Gatlin's election to congress had been obtained by fraud and declaring his seat vacant.

The vote in the committee was 6-3, a record having a vote that $10,000 was expended by the candidate and his father, Daniel Catlin, a retired tobacco multi-millionaire of St. Louis.

It was contended on behalf of the accused representative that most of this money was expended by his father without his personal knowledge, but this bore no weight with the members of the committee.

"And he tore his shirt," the chaplain intoned, he rushed, and repeated the text in a louder voice: 'And he tore his shirt.'"

"'Found a horse?' Nonsense! They would never put you in jail for finding a horse."

ECZEMA CAME ON SCALP

Lebanon, O.—"My eczema started on my thigh with a small pimple. It came on my scalp. It began to itch and I began to scratch. For fifteen or twenty years I could not tell what I passed through with that awful itching. I would scratch until the blood would soak through my underwear, and I couldn't talk to my friends on the street but I would be digging and punching that spot, until I was very much ashamed. The itching was so intense I could not sleep after once in bed and warm. I certainly suffered torment with that eczema for many years.

"I chased after everything I ever heard of, but all to no avail. I saw the advertisement for Cuticura Soap and advertisement for Cuticura Soap and I bought a box. I applied the first dose to that awful itching fire on my leg and scalp. In less than a minute the itching on both places ceased. I got some more Cuticura Soap and Ointment. After the second day I never had another itching spell, and Cuticura Soap and Ointment completely cured me. I was troubled with eczema all over my scalp. The Cuticura Soap has cured that trouble." The Middle-Aged Woman.
Of the many ways in which the middle-aged woman may vary the effect of her afternoon gowns none is simpler than the use of a collar and cuffs of white voile edged with scalloping and embroidery in a floral design. Another change may be the frock set of white chiffon with border of black maline, and still another is the one of black net hemstitched with silver thread. Some of these collars are so long in front that they terminate only at the waist line, where they cross in a simple effect and are tucked away under the skirt. An excellent model of this sort is of light blue lawn embroidered with black dots, and a second is of white aspic trimmed with tiny folds of broadcloth, alternating with sponge.

A WINNING START
A Perfectly Digested Breakfast Makes Nerve Force for the Day.

Everything goes wrong if the breakfast lies in your stomach like a mud pie. What you eat does harm if you can't digest it—it turns to poison.

A bright lady teacher found this to be true, even of an ordinary light breakfast of eggs and toast. She says:

"Two years ago I contracted a very annoying form of indigestion. My stomach was in such condition that a simple breakfast of fruit, toast and eggs gave me great distress."

"I was slow to believe that trouble could come from such a simple diet, but finally had to give it up, and found a great change upon a cup of hot Postum and Grape-Nuts with cream, for my morning meal. For more than a year I have held to this course and have not suffered except when indigestionally varying my diet."

"I have been a teacher for several years and find that my easily digested breakfast means a saving of nervous force for the entire day. My gain of ten pounds in weight also causes me to want to testify to the value of Grape-Nuts."

Grape-Nuts holds first rank at our table."

VETERAN IS DROWNED

WILLIAM MONTGOMERY LOST HIS LIFE IN GILBERT'S CREEK.

Deceased Was Well Known Citizen and Served in Union Army in Civil War.

Frankfort, Ky.—The body of Wm. Montgomery, aged 65, a missing Anderson county farmer, was found near the mouth of Gilbert's creek. Montgomery had been missing from his home for several days and it was feared he had been drowned in the creek, which had become unusually swollen after a very hard rain.

It is thought practically certain now that he tried to cross the creek while it was still very high and was drowned. His body was washed out into the river and was not discovered till a passing steambot brought it to the surface of the water.

Mr. Montgomery was a Union veteran and was well known in Frankfort where his nephew, Merritt Montgomery, lives.

BAD WRECK IS AVOIDED

Passengers on Sleeper in Covington Are Saved by Quick Work of Conductor.

Covington, Ky.—Passengers aboard a sleeper on L. & N. train No. 33 from Jacksonville, Atlanta, and Knoxville narrowly escaped injury at the Willow street crossing in Central Covington, but were saved by L. & N. Conductor Bailey.

The train had been flagged by a Big Four freight which was standing a cut of cars over the crossover track. Later the freight cars were divided to permit the passage of the passenger train. A trainman signalled Engineer Clark, of the L. & N., to come ahead, but evidently the Big Four engineer mistook the signal for himself and backed his cars across.

A day coach on the passenger train was ripped from end to end, and the dining car which followed was torn along its side. Following this came the sleeper, which contained 15 passengers. Realizing the danger to these, Conductor Bailey frantically waved a stop signal, and his engineer halted the train just as the forward vestibule was knocked off and wrecked.

DEMURRERS UPHOLD

Legal Point Concerning Commercial Scales Is Settled That Is of Interest to Entire State.

Lexington, Ky.—The fourteen indictments which last May were returned by the grand jury against various grocers and market men, charging them with using false scales in their sales, were all thrown out of court. Commonwealth's Attorney John R. Allen admitting that the demurrers were well sustained, as he said the law in this state did not cover the point complained of in the scales.

W. P. Kimball attorney for the defendants, had argued there was no allegation that the scales falsely weighed and stated moreover that they were absolutely correct as to weight.

The computing scale was not a matter of convenience, both to seller and buyer, and it could not be shown the scale was false in computing the value of the article sold, leaving out of the back of a half cent.

Mr. Kimball asked the court to sustain the demurrer on the ground that the indictment did not specify in what respect the scale was false. Commonwealth's Attorney Allen said that he could not agree with Mr. Kimball that the scales complained of were arithmetically correct, but he did believe it was commercially correct, as the custom all over the country was for merchants to give and take in the matter of a fraction of a cent. On the selling price of an article, where weight determined the value.

Col. Allen said he was of the opinion the make of scale complained of in the indictment was correct as to weight, but the law made no provision for punishment where the alleged offense was in the computing chart.

The pile was ignited in the public square and attracted a large crowd. Many historic tables, layouts and roulette wheels were reduced to ashes. They were the last relics of the wideopen days in Lexington.

OPPOSES NEW COUNTY

Petition Alleges That Territory Does Not Include Required Number of Inhabitants.

Somerset, Ky.—George A. Bell, a resident of the new county of McCrory, which was created out of portions of Pulaski, Whitley and Wayne counties, has filed suit through his attorneys, Kennedy & Kennedy, in the Wayne circuit court, to test the constitutionality of the act making McCrory county, and it is said that those who are opposed to the new county will fight it to a finish in the courts.

The petition of Bell alleges that the new county only contains 9,000 population, or 8,000 or more less than the required number to make it constitutional. He also alleges that the territory embraced by the new county contains less than 400 square miles, and that one of the boundary lines passes through ten miles to Williamsburg, which is the county seat of Whitley county, and that these three allegations set out are all in conflict with the constitutional provisions required for the creation of a new county.

HURT IN RUNAWAY

Bowling Green, Ky.—Mrs. Flora Williams, wife of John Lewis Williams, a well-to-do farmer of the Bays Fork neighborhood, this county, was badly hurt in a runaway accident. Mr. and Mrs. Williams were driving two horses attached to a buckboard. A calf in a field ran up behind the animals causing them to run away. The buckboard was dashed against a tree, throwing the occupants violently to the ground. Mr. Williams escaped injury, but Mrs. Williams received a gash two inches long on the forehead and her head and breast were badly bruised. The horses continued to run until the lines caught in a wire fence. The rig was demolished.

WILL SELL GAS SHARES

Louisville, Ky.—Mayor Head announced that he would sell 3,500 shares of Louisville Gas Co. stock which the city holds for $150 the share. He recently refused to sell this stock at the rate of $120 the share to the Billeys syndicate, of Chicago, which now controls practically all gas and electric public service concerns in Louisville. Local representatives of the Billeys said that the city's price is prohibitive. A sale at the price named would net the city treasury $525,000.

TRESTLE BLOWN UP

Lexington, Ky.—A large trestle, belonging to the Roe's county, where 200 miners are on strike, was blown up.

A railroad tie, heavily charged with dynamite, was discovered just in time to prevent a train from being wrecked. The company placed additional guards about the plant.

THE KITCHEN CABINET

ANY one can carry his burden, however heavy, if he will. Any one can work, however hard, for one day. Any one can live sweetly, patiently, lovingly, purely, till the sun goes down. And that is all that life ever really means.

ECONOMICAL LIVING

It is a necessity for the majority of people to buy meat to learn to cook those cuts which are cheap, or cheaper than the choice cuts. As meat is one of our most expensive foods, wise buying will lessen the monthly bills.

Get a pound of tripe cut from the hump of beef, cut the pieces in size for serving, roll in flour and brown in a frying pan with beef drippings or suet.

When well browned, add two tablespoons of beef drippings and two tablespoons of flour, mix well and add three cups of stock or water; let this boil. In a casserole put thin slices of a small carrot and onion, and pour over this the boiling mixture with a teaspoonful of salt and a few dashes of red pepper. Cover and place in a hot oven for an hour.

A medium fish steak, carefully cooked is tender, well flavored and palatable. Score the steak on both sides and sprinkle with a tablespoonful of lemon juice or vinegar, which softens the fiber; season with salt, pepper, a dash of nutmeg, cloves and a little chopped onion. Cover thickly with fine bread crumbs, roll up and fasten well with skewers. Bake over well in a hot frying pan, add a pint of stock or water and bake an hour and a half.

A dish which may be new to some is an old one to many of our friends across the water, Bonny Clabber. This is simply milk that has become thick before it is very acid. If it has stood and acquired cream all the better. Serve as one does a custard, sprinkled with a little grated maple sugar or with brown sugar. It is a most wholesome dish for hot weather, good for all ages and especially good for those who have alimentary troubles.

Just as another easily prepared food, which is both good and cheap. It is never economy to buy wilted vegetables or questionable fruit. The waste makes them more costly than those which cost a few cents more.

EVER bear more than one kind of trouble at a time. Some people bear three—all they have now and then ever had and all they expect to have.

GENERAL HINTS

If the sweet peas, cucumber vines and rose bushes are infested with the ubiquitous bug and lice which destroy the plants, use the following spray:

Melt a third of a bar of ivory soap, add a teaspoonful of kerosene and eight quarts of water. Use this in the sprayer and spray everything that needs it, as it is a universal killer.

A Famous Cholera Cure—Mix together a fourth of a teaspoonful of soda, the same of ginger, fifteen drops of peppermint; add to a glass of hot water. Take a glass of this every three hours.

A Splendid Lotion for Tan.—When preparing cottage cheese, save the whey, and in this cook a good-sized cucumber, peeling and all; cut it in slices before cooking, let stand until cool, strain and add a tablespoonful of alcohol and a teaspoonful of benzoin, two drops of oil of rose. There should be a cupful of the whey and cucumber juice.

A fine shampoo for dark hair is the well-beaten yolk of an egg. Rub it well into the scalp and rinse with several waters. The rinsing of the hair is the important point to have well done. Add a few drops of any desired perfume to the rinsing water and a delicate odor will remain—in your tresses for a week. White hair should be rinsed in water quite well blueed with bluing.

When buying grape fruit, oranges, lemons, or in fact any large fruit, weigh them in the hands, as the heavier ones are most profitable, are more full of juice.

Carry some sheets of asbestos paper with you when camping; they may be rolled into cone shaped dishes, set point down into the camp fire and will hold any vegetables to be baked, without being troubled with ashes.

Keeping the feet from the floor of the car when riding on the steam cars, then on a cushion or bag. The vibration of the car causes the illness.

A folding coat hanger is a great convenience to use when traveling. The paper bag which the porter gives you to cover your hat may be used to cover a coat, at least the upper part of it. Silt the bag at the bottom and put the hook of the hanger through that.

Patience Is No Virtue!

Be Impatient With Backache! Too patiently do many women endure backache, rheumatism, neuralgia, Support and urinary ills; thinking them part of woman's lot. Often it is only weak Kidneys and Doan's Kidney Pills would cure the case.

Mr. J. Hunt, 8th St. St. Paul, Minn., says: "For thirty years I suffered from kidney trouble. I had my backache, headache and dizzy spells and my limbs became so swollen that I could not walk. Doan's Kidney Pills cured me after everything else had failed. I feel now as I never did before."

SPLENDID OUTLOOK FOR CROPS IN WESTERN CANADA

RELIABLE INFORMATION FROM THE GRAIN FIELDS SHOW THAT THE PROSPECTS ARE GOOD.

This is the time of year when considerable anxiety is felt in the northern agricultural districts as to the probable outcome of the growing crops. Central Canada, comprising the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, with their 12,000,000 acres of wheat, oats, barley and flax, of which 5,000,000 acres may be said to be sown to wheat alone, has become a great factor in the grain markets of the world. Besides this, government returns show that every state in the Union has representatives in these provinces, and naturally the friends of these representatives are anxious to hear of their success. It has never been said of that country that it is absolutely faultless. There are, and have been, districts that have experienced the vagaries of the weather, the same as in districts south of the boundary line between the two countries, but these are only such as are to be expected in any agricultural country. The past has proven that the agricultural possibilities of this portion of Canada are probably more extensive in every grain, wheat, corn, clover, grain raising & the chief industry. The present year promises to be even better than past years, and in a month or six weeks it is felt there will be produced the evidence that warrants the enthusiasm of the present. These great harvests will have the ripened wheat, oats, barley and flax, and the farmer, who has been looking forward to making his last payment on his big farm will be satisfied. At the time of writing, all crops give the promise of reaching the most sanguine expectations.

In the central portion of Alberta, it is said, that crop conditions are more favorable than in any previous year. Heavy rains recently visited this part, and the whole of this grain growing section has been covered. Reports like the following come from all parts:

"Splendid heavy rain yesterday. Crops forging ahead. Great prospects. All grain more than a week ahead of last year. Weather warm last week. Good rains last night."

From southern Alberta the reports to the same effect are even more in excellent condition. "Labor scarce."

Throughout Saskatchewan all grains are looking well, and there has been sufficient rain to carry them through to harvest.

From all portions of Manitoba there comes an assurance of an abundant crop of all grains. Throughout southern Manitoba, where rain was needed a few weeks ago, there has lately been abundant precipitation, and that portion of the province will in all probability have a crop to equal the best anticipations. A large quantity of grain was sown in the stubble in the newer west, which is never a satisfactory method of farming, and may reduce the general average.

Taken altogether, the country is now fully two weeks in advance of last year, and in all grains the acreage and yield are much larger than in 1911. This means that with auspicious weather the west will have the grandest harvest in its history. Two hundred and fifty million bushels of wheat has been mentioned as an estimate of the present growing crop, and it looks now as if that guess will be none too large.

Pittsburg Chivalry.
"What's going on here?" demanded a man as he came upon two little boys bathing in a vacant lot on the south side. The lad who was on top was rubbing weeds over the face of the under one.

"Stop it," said the man, grabbing the victor by the neck and pulling him away. "What in the world are you trying to do to his face with those weeds?"

"So? Why, he swore in front of some girls, and I rubbed some smartweed in his eyes to become a great man like Abraham Lincoln."—Pittsburg Sun.

In the Grant County News of last week appeared the following:
"Prisoners in the county jail who are sentenced for only a few weeks or to serve out a small fine, who would not run away if they had the opportunity, could, if the law would permit, be farmed out to the highest bidder for their services, which would be a good thing for the prisoners and at the same time reduce the county's and state's expense in keeping them."
Are the people in other counties of this State as law-abiding as are those of Boone there would be no need of jails. It has been so long since a prisoner has been sent to our county jail that the lock has grown rusty, and we doubt very much if the jailer could unlock the door if necessary.

Two government dredge boats are tied up at Rabbit Hash. They are getting the channel at Rising Sun bar when the water gets lower. One of Asa Delph's boys had his head cut open in a mysterious manner while standing the night session of the Waterloo picnic. All Wingate has severed connection with the late at Rabbit Hash, Frank Cunningham, of Rising Sun, going in as partner with McMurtry. Quite a number of Rising Sun's colored people passed through here Sunday enroute to Burlington to a basket dinner at the colored Baptist church there. The Erlanger ball team came to town last Saturday with color men flying from their auto and accompanied by a good sized crowd of rooters, who hoped to see them annihilate the local team. Verity that fellow color defeat at Erlanger. Carter pitched for the visitors until that fatal sixth inning when the local team, tending him from the mound, Victor, a semi-pro, taking his place had trouble locating the plate, which, with a timely hit, gave the locals two more runs. Rogers, who cut his leg quite badly last Thursday thought he could pitch the game, but his injured limb was too painful and he was relieved by "Old Pap Brady," who pitched the last five innings, allowing the visitors only one hit and striking out ten men. Verity that fellow Brady is a wonder. Headwork. Final score 10 to 5 in favor of Belleview. Belleview 12 hits; Erlanger 7.

Dr. K. C. Curd will visit Grant P. O. the week beginning August 19th. High examination and glasses furnished. He will return every six weeks in the future. Full value assured to all.

UNION.

Miss Ella Judge, one of our prettiest and most popular young ladies, gave the young folks a dance last Wednesday night. A very large crowd was present, and all report a splendid time, as Miss Ella is a good entertainer. All hope that she will give another in the near future. A fish fry and a chicken soup will be given by the Union Creamery association on Tuesday, August 13, 1912, at 12 noon. All the stockholders, patrons and friends of the creamery are invited to be present. The ladies are requested to bring their own plates. The stockholders' meeting will be held on this occasion. Come and have a pleasant day. Last Sunday while Elmer Kirkpatrick and family were spending the day with his brother Wm. Kirkpatrick, of Burlington, thieves stole all his potatoes. Previous to that some of his potatoes and chickens were stolen.

PETERSBURG.

Crops and grass seed rain badly. John M. Batts is laying concrete walks in the school-house yard. The drought has cut short our supply in the way of garden truck. Mrs. Chas. McWeathy and children are here visiting relatives at Samuel Hubbard and family. Richard McWeathy remains very low, and is not expected to survive many days. Dudley Blyth and family were guests of J. M. Batts and wife, Saturday and Sunday. Up to today, Sunday, eleven bodies have been interred in the local cemetery since January 6th. Remember Miss Lou Allen's sale for next Saturday afternoon. Come and get your share of the great bargain. Elder Oscar Riley, of Covington, filled his appointment here Sunday with the Christian congregation. John Black and daughters and Dewitt Wilber of Hartford, Ind., were guests of Jim Mahan and wife, Sunday. J. E. Stott showed his fine poultry at the Lawrenceburg fair, last week, and with nine entries he took 7 blue and 2 red ribbons. As section of the Petersburg cemetery I request each one of you in cleaning their lots of grass or trash to take all such off the grounds or lots. John Black was an accommodating correspondent. She is always ready to aid her brother pencil shaver in any way she can and she is competent to assist any one in this line. Any person wanting a full blood light Brahma rooster right from the poultry pen in New Washington, Ohio, can be furnished by calling on C. H. Acra, Petersburg, Ky., at $1 if taken this month.

Claude Coyle, of Pittsburg, is visiting relatives here. Miss Mabel Pace has returned to her home in Winchester. Mrs. Higgins, of East Bend, was a recent guest of Rev. and Mrs. S. J. Bradley. Snelling. Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Gordon, of Louisville, have guests of Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Gordon and other relatives here the past week. John Swasey, of Norwood, O., came home Friday and made a short visit with his home folks previous to his departure for Wheeling, West Va. Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Hodges entertained their children, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Chaplin, Ernest Hodges and some other relatives from East Bend neighborhood, last week. Granville Barker was born Sept. 11, 1891, and departed this life at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Klapp, Monday morning, July 22, 1912. He was the youngest son of Thomas and Annie Barker, both deceased. He died of appendicitis and was only 11 a few days. He was operated on Thursday preceding his death and the surgeons found the appendix bursted. Granville was an industrious young man of good habits and deservedly popular with all with whom he was acquainted. He leaves his grandparents and one brother and other relatives and a host of friends to mourn his death. Funeral services were conducted at the house Tuesday afternoon by Rev. S. J. Bradley. The remains were buried in the cemetery here in presence of a large concourse of sorrowing relatives. The relatives have the sympathy of the entire community in their sad bereavement.

Card of Thanks—We desire to thank our neighbors and friends for their kindness shown during the illness and death of our friend, Granville Barker. Especially do we desire to thank the minister, Rev. Bradley, the doctors, Grant, Blackburn Libbert and Emmert, the nurse, Miss Janie Hurd and the undertakers, Messrs. Bueffinger and Chas. Klapp and wife.

He Won't Limp Now. No more limping for Thomas Moore of Cochran, Ga. "I had a bad sore on my leg that nothing seemed to help. I used Bucklen's Arnica Salve," he writes "but this wonderful healer soon cured me." Heals old, running sores, burns, cuts, bruises, eczema or piles. Try it. Only 25 cents at all dealers.

HATHAWAY.

A good rain is badly needed. The second crop of red clover is being harvested. Some one has been mabeuvering about the north pole lately, hence these scorch days. Raymond Smith, road supervisor, did some needed work on the public roads here last week. Samuel Hubbard and family, of Muncie, Ind., are here visiting his sister and brother's families. M. M. Ryle and family, of Beach Grove, spent last Sunday very pleasantly with Nathan Clements and family. R. Lee Huey and family and mother, J. C. White and family, and Johnson, dined at Geo. L. Smith's Sunday. Several from this place attended the lawn fete at Waterloo, last Saturday, and spent a very enjoyable afternoon. Dr. A. G. G. Richardson and family spent a day, recently on Gunpowder fishing. He did not take home with him a great many of the finny tribe. Nathan Clements had the misfortune to lose one of his horses one day last week. He was tempted to jump a gate and a picket pierced its abdomen. Miss Josie Stephens spent last Saturday with Mrs. Cynthia White. Her mother and sister spent the afternoon there also which was very much appreciated by the hostess.

Several of us met three expert fishermen, viz: James Mitchell and son, and Owen Blankenbaker. They had started to take a hole near Robt. Allen's. When they reached Riddell's Run at Gunpowder they found backwater, where they fished a while, and then proceeded up the creek to the residence of Mr. Mitchell. Mr. Mitchell reported to us that this spring last summer he had hooked 18 bass and had landed 12 of them safely. Can any one beat this record? If not he is entitled to the blue ribbon as an angler with pole and line.

PLATTSBURG.

Several nights last week threatened frost. One of Garnett Huey's college chums spent last week with him at home near here. About the same number of people from here attended the Lawrenceburg fair last Saturday. The drought is becoming serious in this neighborhood. Drying crops have suffered considerable damage in the past week. Chas. Sullivan and Albert Acra were doing some much needed repairs on the telephone line. Wm. Worford, of Cleves, Ohio, spent Saturday night and Sunday here and his wife and little daughter returned home with him. Edward Sebree has become very regular in his attendance at church at Bellevue. There are some doubts expressed as to that being the only reason for his regular attendance. R. B. Huey requests me to say that three of his best ewes have been missing from his pasture for several weeks, and any information from the neighbors about them will be thankfully received by him. Paris Akin returned last week from Richmond, where he had been attending the summer term of the E. K. S. N. S. He will leave about Sept. 1st for Corbin, in the southern part of the State, where he will teach this winter. R. B. Huey and Ira Ryle have about completed negotiations whereby Mr. Ryle will become the possessor of 75 acres of Mr. Huey's farm. The tract includes Mr. Huey's tenant house and the large tobacco barn which he built a few years ago. Enoch White died at his home near Lawrenceburg, Sunday, Saturday. He suffered the third stroke of paralysis several weeks ago and lingered until Saturday. The remains were laid to rest in the Petersburg cemetery at 2 P. m. Sunday, in the presence of a large number of sorrowing relatives and friends. A brief service by Rev. Edgar Riley. Arthur Alloway and John Barry of Petersburg, were stocking Woolper creek one day last week with black bass, furnished by the Government, and which had been shipped to them from the government fish hatcheries at Jacksonville, Fla. They placed 303 of them at various points between the old mill dam near B. Akin's and the old Sim Baldon place. Parties desiring to fish in this stream are urged to thoroughly inform themselves in regard to the new fish law, as all streams stocked by government are under government protection, and some one may draw a heavy fine for violating the law in regard to fishing in these streams. Mr. Alloway informs me that the law provides a penalty for catching any black bass from this stream that measures less than eight inches in length.

CURED GAPES.

I am an old poultry raiser and Burdon Poultry Cure is the only remedy I have ever found that will cure gapes. It has cured my chickens. I have given it to—Mrs. J. A. Lynn, Purcellville, Va. Sold by M. Riddell, Burlington, Ky. and Mrs. C. Goode, 19-21 Pike St., Covington, Ky.

Tanner, March 24, 1841. To this union two children were born—L. N. Criger, of Barto, Florida, and Mrs. B. C. Tanner. His wife having preceded him to the grave several years he found a pleasant and comfortable home with his daughter. He united with the Baptist church early in life and was an active and faithful member of that body until age and infirmity compelled him to retire from active church work. After a very impressive service at Hopeful, conducted by Rev. Hakenburg, of Cincinnati, the remains were interred in Hopeful cemetery last Saturday. In the presence of a large assembly of sorrowing relatives and friends, the family has the sympathy of the entire community in their bereavement. NOTES FROM MEADOWBROOK FARM Grain raising robs the soil.

Never overfeed an idle horse.

Filthy houses encourage vermin.

Keep the old and young pigs separate.

Kerosene is an excellent remedy for scaly leg.

The silo is the cheapest farm building we can erect.

Better too much working of butter than not enough.

It requires a keen sight to detect signs of falling pasture.

It is absolutely necessary to keep your fertility on your farm.

Wheat and oats make one of the best general diets for fowls.

In mixed farming the income from the dairy is the most reliable.

Comfortable shelter goes a long way towards making dairying pay.

Cultivate vegetables and flowers when the weather is hot and the soil dry.

It is not uncommon for a Bermuda lily grower to plant 15,000 bulbs at one time.

An old bootleg makes an effective device for keeping bottles off horses' noses.

The horse cannot rest while fighting flies. Better shade or screen the barn windows.

For aphids on sweet peas, use insect powder or tobacco dust, applying with a small bellows.

To secure a good brood sow, an even development is required from pig brood to full maturity.

Hay stacked in the open loses 20 per cent. of its value by spoiling on the sides and bottom.

Five or six pounds of corn are usually required to produce a pound of pork in dry-lot feeding.

As soon as the corn is up, or even before, go over the field with a weeder or smoothing harrow.

Some gardeners make the mistake of laying-by such crops as early potatoes and tomatoes too soon.

Celery delights in a low, rich, heavy, moist soil and is usually grown upon the same land year after year.

It does not pay to devote high-priced land, for long periods, to pasturage and the production of hay.

Time to get the mower in shape for the hay-making season is now rapidly approaching. Sharpen up the knives.

Don't push the fat horse on hot days either in the fields or on road. Once overheated he loses half his value.

Prime fat lambs cannot be produced by alternate grass and grain. They must be pushed to lay on fat from start to finish.

The little chicks do best on corn bread made of sour milk, molasses and cracked corn. They should be fed on something clean.

Unlike other poultry, the turkey has never been thoroughly domesticated, but has remained practically a wild bird in its requirements.

Fence posts of wood that lasts only four or five years can be made to last 20 years by standing two hours in a tank of boiling creosote.

The large tomato worms can be destroyed quickest by hand picking. They can be easily killed by throwing with force to the ground.

Insect pests that destroy or injure the fruit crop may be controlled in a large measure with timely applications of the various spray mixtures.

There is many a dairy farmer who is working hard to feed 20 cows when 10 of them would give him just as much milk and possibly more profit.

The testing association is the index that points to prosperity along this line.

Qualities are very little trouble if given plenty of range, plenty of water and green feed. The little blades will make rapid growth on water, grass and a little cracked corn.

The first few days the seedlings should be fed nothing but grass and water.

The silo makes feed cheap.

Keep only thoroughbred stock.

A dibble is a handy garden tool.

Sort eggs according to size and color.

Curry the filth from the cow's coat before milking.

Take cabbage is a good crop to follow early potatoes.

Let nine milkings pass before using a fresh cow's milk.

Cabbage is one of the very best vegetables to feed to poultry.

High quality of cream can be produced from clean, pure milk.

Better use is made of ground than of whole grain by the dairy cows.

Do not allow the stall where the cow must stand or lie to get filthy.

Never offer a poor pound of butter for sale; rather feed it to the pigs.

Silage and alfalfa combined make the foundation for the best dairy ration.

Woven wire fence is being bought by the mile instead of by the rod now.

The coming of the silo is developing some new high records for high-priced beef.

The secret of successful stack building is to keep the middle full and well tramped.

The calf should have plenty of water to drink and it should always be clean and pure.

Manure is one of the by-products of the dairy farmer and it represents a decided profit.

Many practical hog raisers are now using artificial wallows, built of either cement or lumber.

If winter dairying is to be the most profitable it must be planned for definitely in advance.

Any man who will strike a horse in the head should never be allowed to touch one again.

Keep the laying hens working. To do this feed them at daybreak and just before sundown.

Hogs follow the rows and tramp down the rows of the rape if it is drilled instead of broadcasted.

If you want a lasting cement use melted alum. It hardens at once and water does not affect it.

The poorer the cream the faster should be the speed of the churn slower where cream is rich.

A man cannot work on boiled turnips alone; neither can a horse work on a diet of straw and fodder.

The best location for the warm weather chicks is in the orchard, and the trees also protect them from storms.

Forage crops added to the grain ration cut the cost of pork making 20 to 30 per cent., says F. G. King, Purdue station.

On an average Great Britain yields 30 bushels of wheat to the acre; New South Wales, 15; the United States, 12; and Russia, 8.

Young fruit trees that were planted in the autumn of last year, or in the spring of this year, should be examined carefully.

Cowpeas sown in corn and the entire crop pulled down by hogs give one of the very best returns that can be secured from farm land.

A few trees in the poultry yard are to be desired in this season, but if the yard is devoid of trees it is easy to arrange for artificial shade.

Breeding stock should never be saved from a litter of a vicious old brood sow which is always restless and chasing about the pasture.

Only about one grape seedling in 100 is worth further testing. A 1 to 100 shot offers enough chance to make it interesting to grape enthusiasts.

Do not allow the stall where the cow lies to stand or lie to get filthy. It is not only a nuisance for the cow, but unhealthy for her and the family that drinks her milk.

Never let young chickens perch until their breastbone can endure the strain, as crooked breastbones decrease the value of the bird as well as breeding value considerably.

The successful swine grower studies the form and the general makeup of the ideal hog, thus getting a clear conception of what constitutes healthy, strong, money-making porkers, and then select and breed to that ideal.

Spray twice for peaches—first when the husk is about half off, with arsenate of lead alone or arsenate of lead and self-boiling solution, and the second spraying about 10 days later with the self-boiling lime-sulphur and arsenate of lead.

SELECTION OF SEED FOR NEXT YEAR'S CORN CROP IMPORTANT

Always Best to Use Varieties Adapted to Soil and Climate in Which They are to be Grown—Farmer Should Never Go Far From Home if It Can Possibly be Avoided.

Excellent Samples of Seed.

(By R. M. MILLER.)

In growing corn for seed the farmer must first find the variety best adapted to his needs and then work to bring it to near perfection as possible. It is always best to select the varieties grown on soil and in the climate where the seed is to be improved, because the corn plant is peculiarly sensitive to its surroundings.

Corn that grows well on certain soils will often, if transplanted to other soils prove a failure, and the reverse is true. That is to say, corn which shows up badly on certain soils, may develop to perfection on other soils that are rightly adapted to its needs.

This is a very important factor in the selection of seed, and the breeder should never go far from home for his seed if he can possibly obtain good corn that has been grown on soil and in the climate in which he expects to conduct his breeding operation.

If he must send away for his seed, however, he should select it from that locality which nearest approaches his own, both as to soil and climate.

A great deal of poor seed-corn results from a lack of care in the harvesting and storing. It should be allowed to mature thoroughly before being picked, as immature corn does not obtain all the plant-food intended for it, consequently its vitality is weakened.

Immature corn is hard to keep, as it is liable to sprout and unless there is good circulation of air it will become heated and moldy. Seed-corn should always be selected from the field and never from the load at the crib.

Selecting seed at the time of general harvest is objectionable, because many times the work is done late in the season and in a hurry, and the care of seed-corn is apt to be neglected.

The stalks from which seed-corns are selected should be of medium size, strong at the base, tapering gradually to the tassel, and should have large leaf-developed ears, the leaf in the laboratory of the plant. The stalk should also stand erect and be free from smut or insect attack.

Never select from stalks with suckers. Ears, to be of good size and quality, should have straight rows of regularly-sized kernels and which more nearly represent the type desired. These ears should be at a convenient height of 4 1/2 to 5 feet on the stalks, and should be attached to the stalk by a shank medium in length and strength.

The ear when matured should break over and hang from the tip downward. Ears in an upright position are objectionable because they are more or less subjected to the rains and hot sun, which injure the vitality.

Some experiments show that seed from ears high on the stalk and in an upright position, yield almost 10 bushels less, per acre, than seed from ears hanging in the natural position.

Ears growing high on the stalk and in an upright position, when planted, give stalks, a very high per cent. of which bear ears in a similar manner.

The first month after it has been picked is the most critical time in the handling of seed-corn. As it contains a large amount of moisture at that time, it must be stored in a dry, well ventilated place, and in such a way that each ear will be exposed to a free circulation of air. Seed-corn should always be stored in the ear, but never in barrels, boxes, or sacks, or above large quantities of grain.

There are many ways of preserving seed-corn, as by striking the butts on sharp nails driven through a board, tying ears together in pairs and hanging them over a wire, or by laying them on racks. Any method that will provide a free circulation of air is desirable.

The corn should be thoroughly dried and protected throughout the winter from all sudden or extreme changes of temperature or humidity. It must never be allowed to freeze before it is thoroughly dry, as its fertility will be affected.

Probably the best place to store seed-corn is in the attic. Experiments conducted by Professor Holden, at the Corn Grains in Cross Sections, Showing Proportions of Starch, Gluten, Etc.

Iowa station, show that where seed was stored in more than forty different ways, the attic proved to be the best place.

The next best place is in a cellar where the furnace is placed. The average cellar is too damp and the corn never dries out thoroughly.

Seed-corn hung up on wires or strings under an open shed or in a dry barn, keeps fairly well, but even there, experience shows that much seed-corn is either killed or weakened because the seed gathered moisture during warm, damp spells, and then was injured by cold weather which froze it later.

Sometimes corn will sprout all right in the spring, but that is no sign that it has a vitality to grow well. Much of it may have been so weakened that if the season is cold, or the seed is planted too deep, it will only give weak stalks, and never attain its proper growth or vigor.

In selecting seed-corn it is important that more be involved than merely looking at the ears. The kernels must be studied. By shelling off a portion of the ear from tip to butt a perfect ear will show the kernels close together where they are joined to the cob, of uniform size and shape, compact and attractive in appearance.

PROTEIN FOR THE STUDIOUS FARMER

Best Way to Prepare Soil for Alfalfa is to Grow Some Cultivated Crop for Year or Two.

I have learned that the best way to prepare soil for alfalfa is by growing corn or some cultivated crop on it a year or two, and by observing the growth of the corn I know about what the soil needs. The land must be well drained, rightly fertilized, thoroughly tilled and clean of weeds, then with time and inoculation I know alfalfa will grow. I now always sow in the spring with light seedling of barley for nurse crop, says an expert in the Farm and Home.

Alfalfa should not be cut when the dew or rain is on it, if it is to be fed green. Sufficient feed for two or three days can be cut on a bright day. Cut it when the dew is off, spread it well and let it lie until late in the afternoon, then put it up in small heaps and cover with manure hay caps and leave it for two or three days. It will then be wilted enough and if fed dry and in not too large quantities, there is little danger of causing bloat in animals.

Alfalfa hay contains as much protein as wheat bran. When the farmer is ready to study and work for it and has learned how to grow the alfalfa plant, this protein will come to him almost free of cost except his own work.

Partial Sowing. Partial sowing may be practiced to good advantage on dairy farms where the silo is not used, as most pastures get short and poor in the latter part of summer or fall. An acre of corn planted on a place convenient to the silo or pasture will be worth a great deal at that time. A little green corn cut and fed will save shrinkage in milk in dairy cow or weight in beef stock, which would require a great deal of feed to regain if once lost.

Rape for Hops. I recently drilled a patch of rape using six pounds of seed and 300 pounds fertilizer to an acre. This was tried last year, resulting in very fine hop pasture, says a writer in an exchange. My hops were the best in the neighborhood after running of this rape patch.

Force of Momentum.

The old mountaineer, who was standing on the corner of the main street in a certain little Kentucky town, had never seen an automobile. When a good-sized touring car came rushing up the street at about 30 miles an hour, and slowed down just enough to take the corner on two wheels, his astonishment was extreme.

The old fellow watched the disappearing car with bulging eyes and open mouth. Then turning to a bystander, he remarked, solemnly:

"The horses must shortly have been traveling some when they got loose from that gentleman's carriage!"—Youth's Companion.

What the Addition of an "s" Did.

Please Do Not Pluck the Flowers Without Leave." was the request placed conspicuously in the garden of a residence to which the public occasionally is admitted.

One day a practical joker added "s" to the last word of the sign. The result was that everybody who visited the estate for the next few days carried away a large bouquet of the flowers, and with the blooms lots of leaves.

Important to Mothers.

AUTOLOADING SHOTGUN

For single-trap or field—just toss in a shell, press the button and—“PULL.” The slide bolt makes it easy. You don't have to tug at the barrel or watch an on-and-off device. The action stays open after each single shot. Five shots—three to get the cripples—each under absolute control of the trigger finger. The recoil reloads for you—tucks another shell in; takes the strain off the gun—the discomfort out of the kick—all without diminishing the drive behind the shot. Simple take-down—a few turns of the readily handled magazine screw-cap makes cleaning, carrying and interchange of barrels quick and easy.

Send for a motion picture booklet telling how the kick is used—how a friction device found only on the Remington-UMC Autoloading Shotgun takes the punishment out of heavy loads.

GALLATIN COUNTY NEWS.

Corn and tobacco are both looking fine, thanks to the fine growing weather of last week. If conditions now are for a good crop of both these essentials, and if good weather conditions continue, it is fair to assume that the Gallatin farmer will be in good shape this winter.

Luther Barnhill, formerly of this county, and who was indicted in the Gallatin circuit court two years ago for seduction, was returned to Warsaw by deputy Sheriff Fleming, of Scott county, Monday evening, to stand trial for the indictment returned two years ago. Barnhill has been residing in Scott county lately and it is understood, has married since he left Gallatin. Barnhill was brought before Judge Cammack Tuesday and not being ready for trial, gave bond of $1,000 for his appearance at the November term of court.—Warsaw Independent.

Almost Lost His Life.

S. A. Stid, of Mason, Mich., will never forget his terrible exposure to a merciless storm. “It gave me a dreadful cold,” he writes, “that caused severe pains in my chest, so it was hard for me to breathe. I did so and two bottles completely cured me.” Use only this quick, safe, reliable medicine for coughs, colds, or any throat or lung trouble. Price 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free. There is a grand rush among the Kentucky politicians to get on the Wilson band wagon. The number of "original" Wilson men is increasing every day.

Owing to the poor outlook for a corn crop this year a great many of the farmers are disposing of their surplus stock of hogs—keeping only enough for their own use.

The Lawrenceburg fair was held last week and was a success from start to finish, the crowd on Saturday being immense. The acting and exhibitions in the numerous rings were splendid.

Quite a number of young people from Burlington and vicinity chaperoned by Mrs. R. B. Huey, of Commissary neighborhood, spent two days the latter part of last week camping at Split Rock.

Few men will admit the ownership of a sheep-killing dog unless it is caught in the act. Just now many parts of this country are afflicted with a plague of dogs and a scarcity of sheep.

"I was cured of diarrhoea by one dose of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy," writes M. E. Gebhardt, Oriskany, Pa. There is nothing better. For sale by J. W. Berkshire & Sons and E. E. Kelly.

There is a wide range in the height of growing corn in this county. In some fields the stalks are green and about five and six feet high, while in others the stalks are from one to two feet high. Late planting, is the cause.

Chicken thieves have been making liberal requisitions on the local poultry yards the past month, while another class of nocturnal supply hunters have appropriated almost all the vegetables in Judge Casper's and Mr. J. W. Duncan's gardens.

The members of the Christian churches of Boone county are requested by the committee on time and place, to bring dinner to the county convention at the church, Tuesday, August 13th, as our membership there is small.

We heard a noted weather prophet, who hails from down the Gunpowder creek, say the other day "when you saw a little whirlwind and it was traveling toward the sun it denoted dry weather, when going in the opposite direction wet weather."

One of the most common ailments that hard working people are afflicted with is lame back. Apply Chamberlain's Liniment twice a day and massage the parts thoroughly at each application and you will get quick relief. For sale by J. W. Berkshire & Sons and E. E. Kelly.

"Were all medicines as meritorious as Chamberlain's Colic Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy the world would be much better off and the percentage of suffering greatly decreased," writes Lindsay Scott, of Temple, Ind. For sale by J. W. Berkshire & Sons and E. E. Kelly.

There is an old saying that if it rains on July 2nd, it will rain 29 days in the month. Mr. John Black, of this city, has kept an account, and it rained every day in July except the 8th. Yet the rains were not heavy—some a mere sprinkle, so that in a lot of many rains crops are suffering for water.—Carrollton Democrat.

Ladies' Aid Committee. An investigation of the records at the County Clerk's office, for several years past, reveals the fact that over 100 per cent of sheep killed by dogs in this county, occurred during the months of July and August. Why would it not be a good idea for the owners of dogs to keep them tied or muzzled during these two months?

Mrs. Fannie B. Adams and Miss Nellie Martin returned home last week from a delightful visit of several days with Miss Iva Rouse and sisters, D. E. Lavell and wife, at Lexington. It begins to look as though 1912 intends going down in history as a year without a summer. The temperature has approached the past few weeks, consequently the growth of vegetation has been retarded, although it has not suffered as much as it would have done had a high temperature prevailed during the dry period of the past several weeks.

Blanton Pope, who resides down on Middle creek, is having his residence moved to the top of the hill near its present site. Cincinnati men are doing the work. Mr. Pope hopes to enjoy better health after moving his place of abode to a higher altitude. It will be remembered that he but recently returned from Texas where he spent several months recovering his health.

A resolution condemning Senator W. O. Bradley's actions in the upholding of State and office holding government were adopted by a unanimous vote.

Every evening about dark immense flocks of blackbirds collect in some of the maple trees in town to roost, and keep up an excessive racket. Notwithstanding they are shot at and driven away, they return to the same trees night after night again, although they could go to the woods near town, and be safe from molestation. Besides the litter they make their clatter is very annoying, especially early of mornings when a person likes to sleep.

Card of Thanks.—We hereby desire to express our sincere and heartfelt thanks to our relatives, friends and neighbors for the sympathy and kindness shown us in the loss of our dearly beloved wife and mother, Hanna White, nee Kottmyer, also for the beautiful floral offerings from relatives and friends; also to Rev. Runyan for his words of consolation, and the choir for their singing and to Mr. Al. Hixon, undertaker, for the manner in which he conducted the funeral.

Great preparations are being made by the management of the North Kentucky Agricultural Association for its Seventeenth annual fair, which opens at Florence on the 28th of this month and will continue for three days. The grounds for the fair are in first-class order, buildings and fences will be whitewashed and everything will be in splendid shape. The horse show promises to be the best in years; the hog show will be a fine one; the poultry show bids fair to excel that of last year, while the Foal Hall department will probably be fuller than usual this year. The Amusement Committee has made splendid plans to furnish music which will be a feature of the fair.

Some Wheat.

What promises to be the best field of wheat in the state this season was raised on the farm of Mr. Cornet between Lawrenceburg and Aurora. Off of a little less than twelve acres he threshed 335 bushels, making thirty-three and a fourth bushels to the acre. The quality, too, is strictly first class, weighing 61 pounds to the bushel, and is entirely free from rye, cheat and cockle. From eight acres of the same field Mr. Cornet threshed thirty-six bushels and ten pounds per acre last year. As Mr. Cornet claims to be a scientific as well as a practical farmer, he has given some attention to the use of good seed and proper cultivation.—Lawrenceburg Register.

GRAFT IS ENORMOUS

$2,400,000 GIVEN NEW YORK POLICE YEARLY, SAYS ROSENTHAL ACCOMPLICE.

CONFESSION HITS INSPECTORS

Jack Rose Tells Whitman Accused Lieutenant Is Only Part of Widespread System in Department and Names Three Others "Higher Up."

New York, Aug. 1.—Promising the most sensational revelations of corruption in the New York police department, an investigation was started here Tuesday as the result of the confessions of "Jack" Rose, "Bridge" Webber and Harry Vallon, whose amazing story cleared up the mystery of the actual murder of Herman Rosenthal, gambler, to the stage where all that remains is to arrest the three assassins still at large—"Whitey" Lewis, "Lefty Louie" and "Gyp, the Blood."

Lieutenant Becker, commander of one of the three strong arm squads, now in the Tombs under indictment on a charge of first degree murder, so far has maintained a stolid silence, but it is declared that unpublished parts of the confession of Rose, Webber and Vallon will show that Becker himself was only "small fry" in the system that is alleged to have enabled gambling houses to flourish by police connivance bought with graft money. Three inspectors, next highest in grade to the commissioners, are implicated, and a former high city official not connected with the police, as well.

Jack Rose told District Attorney Whitman that he had collected $2,400,000 from tenderloin gamblers in one year and turned all of it over to Lieutenant Becker.

Rose said he worked on a commission. He said he did not know where it went after it reached Becker, but the latter told him it was split up at headquarters among five men in the police department, including himself and one outsider.

It has become known that some of the most important evidence in the possession of District Attorney Whitman tending to show an alliance between the police and the gamblers is in the form of canceled checks, alleged to have been given to Becker and other police officials in payment for their protection.

TITANIC'S SPEED IS BLAMED

British Court of Inquiry Exonerates Ismay—Says Propriety Watch Was Not Kept.

London, England, Aug. 1.—The judgment of the British board of trade court of inquiry into the disaster to the White Star liner Titanic, which sank in midocean with 1,517 persons, after collision with an iceberg, April 14, was pronounced Tuesday by Lord Mersey. The court finds:

"That the collision with the iceberg was due to the excessive speed at which the Titanic was navigated.

"That a proper watch was not kept.

"That the ship's boats were properly lowered, but that arrangements for manning them were insufficient.

"That the Leyland liner Californian might have reached the Titanic if she had steamed to do so.

"That the ice was allowed was reasonably safe with proper vigilance.

"That there was no discrimination against third class passengers in the saving of life."

The court of inquiry exonerates J. Bruce Ismay, chairman and managing director of the White Star line, and Sir Cosmo D. Gordon, one of the passengers, from any charges of improper conduct.

In conclusion Lord Mersey severely blamed the British board of trade for its failure to revise the shipping rules of 1894.

More watertight compartments in sailing ships, the provision of lifeboats for all on board and more efficient drills of the crew, as well as a better lookout, are recommended.

Darrow disclosed that hope is entertained that J. B. McNamara's life sentence will be commuted.

DEAD RULER OF JAPAN

Emperor Mutsuhito.

JAPAN'S NEW RULER

YOSHIIHITO MEETS MINISTERS AND REQUESTS THEM TO WORK HARD FOR NATION.

TO BURY EMPEROR AT KYOTO

No Date Has Been Set for Funeral of Late Nipponese Monarch, but It Will Probably Occur Within a Month—New Era for Nation.

Tokyo, Japan, Aug. 1.—Emperor Yoshihito left the palace shortly before noon, proceeding to his former residence at Aoyama. Prior to leaving he received the premier and Prince Yamagata, president of the privy council, and requested them to continue their best efforts on behalf of the emperor and the country and to communicate his desires to their colleagues.

The emperor ascended the throne, before which had been placed simple wooden tables. On these repose the sacred sword and necklace. The third of the sacred treasures, the mirror, which is deposited in the shrine of Ise, will be received by the emperor later.

The imperial and national seals were taken over by his majesty, who immediately arose and, standing, received the homage of the entire assemblage. This concluded the ceremony.

The date for the funeral of Mutsuhito has not yet been fixed. Probably it will take place within a month at Kyoto, where the emperor had expressed a desire to be buried on the site of Maruyama palace, built by Hideyoshi in the sixteenth century.

Under the household law the public coronation of Emperor Yoshihito must be held at Kyoto. This probably will take place about one year hence. All entertainments will cease for a protracted period, which so far has not been designated.

A new era begins, the name of which will be announced at once, together with other details on which the council of state is engaged. There is a possibility that a special session of parliament will be called for the purpose of securing the fullest cooperation.

It is not believed that the accession of the new emperor will change the situation with regard to the policies of Japan. Yoshihito is highly respected by his subjects.

The president received the following replies to his messages from the new emperor and the empress dowager:

"I am deeply touched by your sympathetic message and offer you my sincere thanks. (Signed) "YOSHIIHITO."

SUGAR BILL IS PASSED

SENATE ADOPTS MEASURE THAT WILL REDUCE TARIFF DUTY.

As Adopted is a Compromise Between the Lodge Plan and That Advocated by Bristow.

Washington, July 30.—The first purely Republican revision measure of the present congress, a Republican sugar tariff bill, was passed in the senate Saturday night.

The sugar bill was a compromise between the Lodge plan, endorsed by the regular Republicans, and the Bristow bill, behind which the progressives lined up. It would cut the present sugar duty of $1.90 to $1.60; would abolish the Dutch standard, under which practically no refined sugar can be imported, and would abolish the 7½ cent "refiners' differential," an additional duty on refined sugar, which it is claimed, has accrued directly to the profit of the sugar refiners.

It is estimated that the sugar tariff reduction, if it becomes effective, will reduce government customs receipts about $5,000,000, while its saving in the retail sugar bill of the nation is estimated at $20,000,000.

The Democratic free sugar bill passed by the house did not come to vote in the senate. The Bristow-Lodge amendment was first adopted in the committee of the whole by a vote of 37 to 25. Senators Thornton and Foster of Louisiana, Democrats, voting with the Republicans.

Washington, July 29.—By a vote of 37 to 25, the senate in its consideration of the excise bill repealed the reciprocity law in its entirety and levied a duty of two dollars a ton on paper here Friday night.

O. K. THE TAFT NOMINATION

Reply to Charges That President "Stole the Nomination at Chicago" Is Made Public.

Washington, July 30.—The long expected and carefully prepared answer of the Taft faction to the reiterated charges that the president "stole the nomination at Chicago" was issued from the White House Sunday. It is the longest and probably the most complete political statement ever put out from the executive mansion.

"An examination of the facts," concludes the statement, "shows that the tribunals were right in every instance. There is not the slightest evidence that they were moved by other than a mere desire to reach a right conclusion.

On the other hand, the action of the Roosevelt men in bringing 160 contests that they promptly abandoned strongly tended to show the lack of good faith in the prosecution of all of them. Those who support President Taft can well afford to stand on the record in these cases."

DETROIT ALDERMEN, UNDER BOND, SEEK SEATS ANEW.

Safs of Council Committee Clerk Edward Schreiter Is Forced and Papers Taken Out.

Detroit, Mich., July 30.—All of the aldermen under arrest on the charge of accepting money for their votes in a street closing case will be before their constituents for reelection according to the list of primary candidates when time had expired here for filing of petitions.

By direction of Assistant Prosecuting Attorney Jasmowski the safe in the office of Council Committee Clerk Edward Schreiter, Jr., was forced open by a lock expert. When the authorities left the office they carried a bundle of papers taken out of the safe with them.

Alderman Patrick O'Brien was released from custody and the charge against him withdrawn. The following aldermen appeared in the police court and were remanded for arraignment tomorrow, each giving bail in the sum of $5,000:

MINORITY MAKES ITS REPORT

Conclusion of Republican Members of Stanley Steel Committee Is Given Out—Opinions Differ.

Washington, July 30.—The federal incorporation of all concerns engaged in interstate commerce whose capitalization of value exceeds $500,000, is the keynote recommendation of the minority members of the Stanley steel investigation committee. The report of the Republican members of the investigating committee was made public Sunday.

The full report is signed only by Representatives Gardner and Danforth. The remaining Republican members, Representatives Sherling and Young of Michigan, file individual dissents on the exact character of remedial legislation needed.

Messrs. Sterling and Young agree with their Republican colleagues that federal incorporation is a remedy for present industrial evils, but they decline to go so far as to recommend the federal regulation of prices, which Gardner and Danforth favor in the event the situation cannot otherwise be met.

DENIES BEFORE SHE ACCUSED

Evidence Adduced at Trial of Mrs. Daisy Ople Grace Is Damaging to Defendant.

Atlanta, Ga., July 31.—Great stress was laid by the prosecution at the trial of Mrs. Daisy Ople Grace, accused of shooting her husband, Eugene H. Grace, on the manner of her greeting to him when she saw the wounded man for the first time after he was found upon his blood-stained bed last March.

"What are these things they are saying about me?" were the wife's first words, as quoted by Morris Prieley, a state witness, while the jury was excluded.

"Daisy, why did you shoot me?" was the husband's reply.

Just after the jury had been sent out Solicitor General Dorsey had indicated the state's purpose in getting such testimony before the jury.

REFUSES TO LIBERATE THAW

Justice Rules That Slayer of White Is Still Dangerous to Public Peace and Safety.

White Plains, N. Y., July 29.—The decision of Justice Keogh, given on Friday, denying liberty to Thaw in his third effort to escape from Matteawan asylum, was brief. It held that the applicant had not proved his sanity and ordered his return to the Matteawan asylum for the insane, from which he was taken when the writ of habeas corpus was sworn out.

Justice Keogh said: "My whole duty is fully performed when I decide the single question presented for decision, merely, is Harry K. Thaw a present sane or insane and would his release be dangerous to the public peace and safety?"

The KITCHEN CABINET

VERY task wrought out in patience brings a blessing to the door. Joy comes to the waiting worker. But eludes the swift pursuer.

FROZEN DISHES.

There is no desert which over takes the place of ices and ice creams during the hot weather; they are not only refreshing but nourishing, and are so universally well liked that one cannot amuse to serve them on all occasions.

The plain Philadelphia ice cream may be used as a foundation for any number of delightful combinations, for example:

Nougat Ice Cream.—Add a half cupful each of chopped almonds, walnuts and almonds with a teaspoonful each of almond and vanilla extract. One can buy the plain cream all frozen in many places so reasonably, and it can be repacked with any additions of fruit or nuts, making the work very light.

The flavor of peach is given by putting two cups of strained peach pulp and a teaspoonful of lemon juice to plain ice cream.

A delicious flavor of almonds is given to ice cream in this manner: Blanch and chop a cup of almonds, caramelize four tablespoonfuls of sugar and add the almonds. When an cold grind to a powder, add to the cream with a teaspoonful of almond extract.

The most delicious of creams is made by adding two cups of squeezed and strained raspberries to the cream. The color is enhanced by the addition of a teaspoon of lemon juice.

A pretty and easy way to make fancy dessert is raspberry bombe: Line a melon mold with raspberry ice, and fill with vanilla ice cream or with a pineapple ice or ice cream. Pack in ice and salt and let stand four hours. Serve with whipped cream or garnish with fresh berries and leaves.

Sultana Roll.—This is a great favorite and can be made without the use of liquor. Line one pound baking powder cans with pistachio ice cream (this is plain cream with the chopped nuts frozen in it). Sprinkle with candied fruit that has stood over night in a sweetener, add to the cream with a cream. Pack as usual. Serve with the sauce in which the fruit has stood over night.

TAKE your needle, my child, and work at this pattern: It will come out a rose. By and by, like that one stitch at a time taken patiently, the embroidery will come out all right like the embroidery.

—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

HOT WEATHER DISHES.

A fetching and appetizing salad is this: Lay a slice of chilled pineapple on a lettuce leaf, heap a nicely seasoned spoonful of cream cheese in the center and sprinkle with chopped pecans, or walnuts or pistachio nuts. Serve with French dressing.

German Salad.—Boil a white, solid head of cabbage until perfectly tender; drain carefully and put to press between two weights until quite cold. Then slice and place in a salad bowl with half a dozen cold boiled potatoes, cut in slices, a sliced beet, and half a dozen hard cooked eggs cut in slices, a finely chopped onion, and a quarter of a sour orange; mix gently. Have ready a cupful of tartar sauce, season with salt, pepper, mix again, and serve with any cold roast. A drop or two of tabasco sauce is an improvement.

Tartar Sauce.—Mix a tablespoonful of vinegar, a teaspoonful of lemon juice, a quarter of a teaspoonful of salt, a tablespoonful of Worcestershire sauce in a bowl and heat over hot water. Cover with a third of a cup of butter in an omelet pan and add to the first mixture.

Fried Tomatoes With Cream Sauce.—Cut tomatoes in halves without peeling, season with salt, pepper and roll in very fine crumbs. Fry in hot fat until brown, then take up carefully with a pancake turner and arrange on a chop plate. Add a tablespoonful of drippings to the fat already in the pan, stir in a tablespoonful of flour and as soon as it bubbles add a cup of rich milk. Stir until smooth and pour around the tomatoes.

Calves' Head.—Mix a tablespoonful of fine oatmeal into a smooth paste with water, then pour over three pints of boiling water, stirring all the time. Place over the heat and boil until reduced to two pints. Set aside to cool, and pour the clear gravy from the sediment. Add to this the juice of a lemon and sufficient sugar to sweeten. Serve cold.

Lemon Flax.—Grate yellow rind from three lemons, squeeze the juice of six, pour over two quarts of boiling water, stir in a half pound of sugar, and a half yeast cake. Let stand overnight. Bottle, and it is ready for use in a day.

North Carolina Forests. There are more than 10,000,000 acres of forest lands in North Carolina. These forests and the timber tracts depending upon them produce material valued at more than $25,000,000 a year and afford employment for 50,000 men.

GIRL FALLS TO DEATH

STENOGRAPHER FALLS THROUGH SKYLIGHT AT FIRST CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

Miss Burns, in Employ of Financial Secretary, Fatal Accident While Climbing to Roof.

Louisville, Ky.—On her 30th birthday, Miss Vanda Lee Burns, a stenographer to the financial secretary of the First Christian church here, fell through a third-story skylight in the new church structure to almost instant death. At the time of the tragedy Miss Burns was accompanied by William Cross, who said to the police and deputy coroner when questioned: "We climbed to the roof to see the city." According to the colored woman working in the church when Miss Burns fell into the Sunday-school room, she exclaimed, "Oh Lord, have mercy," before lapsing into unconsciousness.

Mr. Cross is a young electrical engineer who was doing some work about the church. He bears an excellent reputation.

Gray, an architect of Louisville, was here consulting with the members of the building committee of the Christ Episcopal congregation with respect to a church which is proposed to build at State and Twelfth streets at a cost of $25,000.

LITTLE GIRL HAS OPERATION.

Dirigo, Ky.—Editor Cary, of the Burkesville Banner, announces a suspension of publication for two weeks. A little 3-year-old daughter of the editor's ate concentrated fly a few weeks ago and it has so affected her esophagus that an operation is necessary to relieve her. The child was conveyed to Nashville and its parents will remain in that city until the danger of the operation is over. As Mr. Cary does most of the work on his paper himself his absence from Burkesville is the occasion of the skipping of these issues.

Dirigo.—News has reached here from Burkesville that Henry Riddle, of Goose Creek, Cumberland county, was drowned at Whetstone while in bathing. He was 23 years old and has been married but a short while. His body was recovered a short time after he sank, but all efforts to revive him failed.

Gray Falconer submitted a written opinion, in which he stated that he did not hold it illegal for the county to furnish compensation to owners of stock which had been killed by order of the county board of health on account of dangerous and contagious disease and to furnish compensation for the destruction of stables in which such infected stock had been housed. The opinion for County Attorney Falconer's opinion was the case brought before the county court recently by Mrs. Caroline P. He was married to Miss Edna Schaufele, of Bellevue, and she will accompany him on his trip to the far-off country. May Place Two Brothers in Better Circumstances.

Mayville, Ky.—While cleaning up his office County Clerk John T. Brown, of Robertson county, found a sealed envelope with the inscription, "Will of S. V. Lee, Filed February 9, 1917." At the time of Mr. Lee's death, twenty-five years ago, he owned several hundred acres of land in Robertson and Harrison counties, besides other properties, and no one thought he had left a will. There were several heirs to the estate, but the will had simply been misplaced.

The county judge has given notice that the will will be opened and read at the next regular term of the Robertson county court. Mr. Lee has two brothers still living, both of whom are at destitute circumstances, one being blind. It is thought the will when opened will place these brothers in a much better condition.

CAN BE BUILT AT $16.575 PER MILE

Report of Chief Engineer on the Proposed Frankfort to Shelbyville Line.

Louisville, Ky.—Roland Cox, chief engineer of the survey of the line from Shelbyville to Frankfort, has completed his final report in which he estimates that the road can be constructed at a cost of $16,575 per mile. The distance between the two points, from the city limits, is but a fraction over twenty miles by the route proposed, which follows the site of the old turnpike closely for the larger part of the way. The report will be submitted for official action to a meeting of the board of directors, which will be held at Frankfort within the next few days, when the building proposition will be discussed.

SEVENTH DAY ADVENTISTS.

Kentucky Conference Will Meet at Elizabethtown.

Elizabethtown, Ky.—The Kentucky conference of the Seventh Day Adventists will be held at the Cave Springs Park in this city August 3-15. The conference will be attended by 150 or 200 delegates. The Rev. B. W. Brown, of Louisville, president of the conference, and the Rev. W. H. White, of Boston, Mass., will begin a tent revival in this city which will be continued for ten days or two weeks. The Adventists will establish a training school and a canning factory near this city provided a sufficient bonus is given. Nearly $1,000 has been subscribed so far to purchase the sites.

HISTORIC TREE IS GONE.

Vandal Hands Lay Low Pride of Elizabethtown.

Elizabethtown, Ky.—The people of Elizabethtown are in a high state of indignation because the large elm tree, one of the finest in the state, which had stood in front of the postoffice at the corner of the public square and South Pennsylvania avenue for time out of memory, had been chopped down during the night. The work is supposed to have been an act of revenge by those who opposed closing the roads.

NEVER TOO LATE TO JOIN.

Williamstown, Ky.—The oldest couple ever united with a church in this county are Mr. and Mrs. George Berry Dance, who joined the Gum Lick Baptist church at a revival meeting which has just closed at that place. Mr. Dance is 81 and his wife 76. They have lived within a stone's throw of the old Gum Lick Baptist church all of their lives. They have children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren who are members.

SUIT FILED AGAINST CITY.

Richmond, Ky.—Suit was filed in the United States district court here by the Cameron Septic Tank Co. of Chicago, asking that the city be perpetually enjoined from an infringement by using a certain sewerage apparatus of which the plaintiffs allege themselves to be possessors of the sole patent rights.

DIES OF SMALLPOX.

Campton, Ky.—Thomas King, of Flat, this county, who was afflicted with a well-developed case of smallpox, died. There are about 50 persons here who have been exposed to the disease, and the county board of health has issued a quarantine and ordered all persons in that community to be vaccinated.

CAMPION CAMP MEETING.

Campion, Ky.—The second annual session of the Campion camp meeting has begun here. The religious services are being conducted by Rev. Mr. Dawson, of Mt. Sterling; Rev. A. Niles, of Cynthiana; Rev. C. P. Robert, of Willmore; and Rev. W. B. Godbey.

HURT WHILE THRESHING.

Glasgow, Ky.—Walter Payne, of Temple Hill, this county, who was threshing wheat on the farm of W. E. Young, acting engineer, was caught between two wheels, his thigh mashed and his entire body bruised.

Williamstown.—Fire destroyed the residence of Fred Stanford and Calvin Bick and badly damaged the residence of J. H. Satriel. The fire broke out in the Stanford house, which was vacant.

CAMPAIGN A SUCCESS

PEOPLE OF KNOX COUNTY TAKING GREAT INTEREST IN HOOKWORM TESTS.

Hundreds of Cases Have Been Treated—Many People Apparently in Good Health Are Afflicted.

Frankfort.—The popular response which has met the efforts of the Kentucky board of health and the Rockefeller sanitary commission to rid Kentucky of the hookworm has been very gratifying for the first week of the campaign, conducted in Knox county. During the week dispensaries for free treatment and examination were established in Barbourville, Corbin, Wilton, Bertha and Lindsay and during the time several hundred in the aggregate applied for examination and treatment.

At the Bethesda dispensary a total of 149 were examined and treatment was administered to 101, who were found to be infected. A cure will be recorded in every instance. At the Corbin dispensary over 100 were given treatment during the week, and at all the dispensaries the interest taken by the people was above expectations. Many people apparently in the best of health were found to be afflicted.

Dispensaries have also been established at Trooper and Warren, mining towns. Dr. McCormick and Dr. Lock will remain in charge. Later dispensaries will be opened at a number of other points.

The inauguration of the hookworm crusade in Kentucky was a matter of speculation, as far as interest of the public at large was concerned, but increased interest warrants the medical authorities to the belief that the hookworm may be entirely eradicated from the state. Two counties, Bell and Warren, have applied for the next campaign, which will be started when the parasite is eradicated from Knox county. It is the belief of the state health board that the hookworm menace to the health of about 50,000 people in all parts of Kentucky.

Hamlet Rules on Legal Point.

While the school act of 1912 requires divisional boards of education to elect only teachers recommended by the trustees of their respective subdistricts, the law does not make it compulsory on the boards to elect whom the trustees recommend for the school in his subdistrict.

The ruling was made by State Superintendent Hamlet on an appeal from the decision of the county superintendent of Perry county.

The act of 1912 provides that the divisional board shall elect a teacher recommended by the trustees of the subdistrict, unless some "reasonable objection" is raised. Ovens insisted that as the patrons did not object to the board was compelled to follow the recommendation of the trustee of the subdistrict. Superintendent John McIntosh, of Perry county, held that the board itself had a right to raise a "reasonable objection," and it was not bound to elect anyone the trustees should recommend. An appeal was taken to State Superintendent Hamlet, who sustained the county superintendent. Having refused to elect the teacher recommended by Trustee Owens for subdistrict 6, the divisional board can not elect anyone else, unless recommended by the trustee of that district, but it can call on him to recommend another teacher.

Losses Part of Annual Appropriation.

Because it failed to spend $3,750 of a $5,000 appropriation during the last year the department of labor and statistics will lose that amount, as it will revert to the treasury. When Commissioner of Agriculture Newman went into office he found there was not sufficient money on hand to carry on the work of the department of labor and statistics, and the legislature appropriated $5,000 for the department. Newman, however, holds that the appropriation should have been spent during the fiscal year and as it was not it reverts back to the state's fund.

McCreary Names Delegates.

Gov. McCreary has appointed delegates to the National Irrigation Congress, which meets in Salt Lake City September 20 and October 1. They follow: Senator Starling Marshall; Henderson; L. C. Owens; Jefferson; G. L. Drury; Morganfield; R. J. Jackson, Clinton, and John C. Mayo, Paintsville.

Ernst Succeeds Shelby.

R. P. Ernst, of Covington, was appointed Republican member of the state election commission. John T. Shelby, of Lexington, having declined to accept the appointment. Mr. Ernst was formerly national committeeman from Kentucky.

Need of State Veterinarian.

Extreme need for a state veterinarian under the department of agriculture and the live stock industry is expressed by Commissioner of Agriculture J. W. Newman, who said that thousands of dollars annually could be saved the state if he had someone whom he could send out promptly to check epidemics. Dr. Robert Graham, connected with the experimental station at Lexington, co-operates with the department as much as he can, but the demand, Commissioner Newman says, is too great.

No Cup For Schools.

The state department of education has ample authority to enforce its rule banishing the common drinking cup in the public schools, in the opinion of Attorney General Garnett, who says he is in perfect sympathy with the purpose of Superintendent of Public Instruction Barksdale, Hamlett, although he holds that the anti-public drinking cup law does not apply to schools.

In a statement given out, sustaining both the opinion of Assistant Attorney General M. M. Logan and the policy of Superintendent Hamlett, General Garnett said:

"The court of appeals ten years ago, in the case of the board of education against the city of Covington in passing on the rights of governing authorities of schools said: 'Our conclusion is that those in charge of such schools have the right to formulate such necessary rules as, in their judgment, will best promote the public good.'"

"The school partakes of the nature of a large family. The teacher is in loco parentis. Those in control of the schools have the right to prohibit the use of the common drinking cup in the schools, not under the act of 1912, but under the law which has been in force for many years. The superintendent of public instruction has been so advised, and I am informed that it is his purpose to prohibit the use of the drinking cup in the common schools of the state, not under the act of 1912, but under the authority vested in the school authorities long before the act became a law."

Injunction Is Refused.

Railroad and other corporation attorneys in Kentucky were keenly interested in the outcome of the suit filed in the federal court here by the Adams Express Co. and heard at Mayville to enjoin the board of valuation and assessment from making the tentative assessment of the company's franchise final.

The injunction was refused on the ground that it was prematurely instituted. This will be the cue to a number of other large corporations, whose tentative assessments were raised enormously this year by the state, and suits probably will be withheld until after final assessment.

The company raised in its petition another question that probably will have to be settled. The company insisted that in estimating the value of its franchise the board included contingent assets in the shape of stock it holds in other concerns, not used in the operation of its business, which should be excluded. The company's attorney at the situs of the company, Some railroads, which have their situs in Kentucky, have insisted on just the opposite course. They want the stocks and bonds they hold of other companies included in the estimate of their franchise value to be apportioned among all the states through which they operate. Judge Cochran did not decide this question, but if the Express Co. is right, though the value of the stocks held by it will be lost to Kentucky, the state officials see where they can make it back twice over by assessing the stocks held by Kentucky railroads as tangible property in this state.

Health Officials Must Itemize Accounts.

"Show me" is the motto of State Auditor H. M. Bosworth. He declined to issue a warrant for $2,500 to the state board of health because the account was not itemized. Atty. Gen. Garnett has sustained Auditor Bosworth and advised him to pay over no money until the account is itemized. The auditor files duplicates of the expenditures of the board. It has been the practice of the board to collect monthly $2,500 from the state, and the state had no way of knowing how the money was spent. When Dr. J. N. McCormack, secretary of the board of health, presented a claim for $2,500 he was told by the auditor that the account must be itemized, which he did. The claim was presented by Dr. John South, a member of the board, and, as the account was not itemized and duplicates of the expenditures were not filed, the auditor turned down the claim.

Losses Part of Fund.

Because the department of agriculture did not spend its special appropriation of $5,000 in the labor and statistics fund the department has lost the use of $3,750, which reverts to the general fund of the state. It was claimed that the appropriation was pretty well exhausted when the new administration took charge, so the last general assembly made a relief appropriation of $5,000. Under the law an appropriation for a special purpose can not be made for a period beyond the immediate fiscal year. The year expired June 30 and the department still had $3,750 of the money on hand, the appropriation not being available until the middle of June, so that the relief granted falls to a great extent of its purpose.

Kentucky Treasury Enriched $232.40 By Collections.

Sherman Goodpastor, state inspector and examiner, turned into the state treasury $232.40 collected from delinquent owners of Lawrence county and filed a report of the conditions of the office with Gov. McCreary. The amounts collected are as follows: Mont-Holt, county clerk, $402.31; H. B. Hentzel, circuit court clerk, $33.85; A. O. Carter, trustee jury fund, $19.09; John H. Carter, sheriff, $119.62; David Boggs, county judge, $3.

A Little Study in Relative Values.

On the 23rd of June Edward Albert, Prince of Wales, was 18 years of age. That means that he was old enough to rule the British empire if his father were to die.

But he won't be "of age" with all which that implies in English law until he is 21.

And he will not be free to choose a wife until he is 25.

An odd logic this—with 18 goes the rule of an empire; with 21 the power to incur debts; and with 25 the right to choose a wife.

This would make an anthropometric world laugh in appreciation. Chicago Post.

RECORD OF A GREAT MEDICINE

Doctors Could Not Help Mrs. Templeton—Regained Health through Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound.

Hooper, Nebraska.—"I am very glad to tell you that Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound has helped me. For five years I suffered from female troubles so I was scarcely able to do my work. I took doctors' medicines and used local treatments but was not helped. I had such awful bearing down pains and my back was so weak I could hardly walk and could not ride. I often had to sit up nights to sleep and my friends thought I could not live long. As my request my husband got me a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound and I commenced to take it. By the time I had taken the seventh bottle my health had returned and I began doing my washing and was a well woman. At one time for three weeks I did all the work for eighteen months with no signs of my old trouble returning. Many have taken your medicine after seeing what it did for me. I would not take $1000 and be where I was. You have my permission to use my name if it will help anyone."—Mrs. Susan Templeton, Hooper, Nebraska.
